UK Music Festivals

Summer in the UK is traditionally the time when people go on holidays. It is also the time for outdoor music festivals. Let's look at some of the most famous ones.

• Glastonbury Festival

The Glastonbury Festival first started in 1970, and is often seen as the standard to judge other festivals by. It takes place on a farm in the south-west of England over 3 days, and visitors camp in the fields around the site.

• Reading Festival

While Glastonbury tries to keep an air of peace and love, the Reading Festival is a noisier, more aggressive weekend. It is much easier to attend as it is in the centre of the city of Reading. Although you can camp, you can also go just for the day. Up to 55,000 people are expected to attend on the weekend of the August Bank Holiday, and top British acts such as Franz Ferdinand and The Kaiser Chiefs will entertain the crowds.

• Creamfields Festival

If you prefer house music to rock, then Creamfields is probably the place for you. Since 1998, this festival of dance music has taken place in Liverpool, also on the final weekend of August, but only for one day, so there is no need to bring your tent. Instead, just enjoy a boogie to top DJs and live acts.

• Knebworth Festival

Knebworth is a huge manor house and the festival takes place in the gardens. It first took place in 1974, and since then acts such as The Rolling Stones, Queen, Elton John and Paul McCartney have all featured.

So, whatever your tastes in music, there is a festival taking place in England to suit you. Just don't forget to pack your raincoat.

Nieves left Puerto Rico when she was 18, after spending years feeling trapped on the island. She finished her education at University of Pennsylvania and Oxford. While living in the mainland United States, she realized that she didn't have a sense of community. So she decided to return home, just a few months before Hurricane Maria made landfall.

After the worst of the hurricane was over, Nieves and her neighbors were in rough shape. Like most of the island's towns and cities, there was no electricity, no running water, and no cell phone service. People in Mariana knew that because of their isolated location, it would take days for government aid to reach them, so they took matters into their own hands.

Nieves and her partner decided to start a community kitchen. They got permission to use an industrial kitchen space. Finding food and cooks was a little bit harder than they expected, at least at first. Immediately after the hurricane, it was difficult or impossible to call anyone, so they had to go door to door to contact people. Nieves ended up with a small team of local residents who had been hit hard by the storm, but still wanted to help. People contributed whatever they could, from beans to vegetables to bags of rice. Young people brought hot food to elderly neighbors. By the end of the week, the community kitchen was feeding 300 people every day. Even more importantly, everyone had a job to do.

Still, Nieves hopes that the lessons her community learned after Maria will help other towns in the future. "We believe that this is a model, or at least in some aspect, that every community needs to have if they're going to survive. Communities are our best chance at adapting. Together we might be able to create more," she said.

24. What made Nieves decide to go back home?

- A. Her lack of a sense of community. B. The hurricane in her hometown.
C. Her feeling of being trapped. D. Her wish to get further education.

25. What did the people in Mariana do after hurricane Maria?

- A. They did nothing but wait for help. B. They delivered food door to door.
C. They donated all to help others. D. They tried to help themselves.

26. Why did Nieves start the community kitchen?

- A. To raise money for local charities. B. To set a model for community work.
C. To provide food for the needy. D. To offer jobs for local people.

27. What lesson can we learn from Nieve's words?

- A. Actions speaks louder than words. B. Many hands make light work.
C. While there is life, there is hope. D. A friend in need is a friend indeed.

Last November, China's Yutu-2 lunar rover spotted something curious on the far side of the moon. The image was unclear, but it was unmistakable. The object looked like a cube sitting on the moon's surface, looking too precise to be just a moon rock—perhaps something left by visiting aliens (外星人) like the monolith in Arthur C. Clarke's "2001: A Space Odyssey."

When the image was published in early December, it immediately attracted attention from the media and space fans around the world, and sparked heated debates. Some Chinese online users on Weibo compared it to the Guanghan Palace, where the goddess of the moon lives according to ancient Chinese mythology. China's space authorities called it the "mystery hut", while others called it the "moon cube".

Yutu-2 was sent for a closer look, and at the leisurely speed the rover is capable of traveling, it took weeks to get up close. On Friday, Our Space, a Chinese language science channel of China National Space Administration, posted an update. There is no monolith, no secret base near a lunar crater. Close up, it turns out to be just a rock. The seemingly perfect geometric (几何形) shape was just a trick of angle, light and shadow.

Although the mystery hut was not a hut at all, one of the rover's remote drivers on Earth pointed out that the rock kind of resembled a rabbit, and one of the stones in front of it looked a bit like a carrot. That's fitting as the rover's name means "Jade Rabbit". The rover has now driven just over 1,000 meters since it arrived three years ago on the moon's far side, in Von Ka rman crater, as part of the Chang'e-4 mission.

28. When first published, the image was thought impossible to be _____.

- A. a moon rock B. a monolith C. a secret base D. a mystery hut

29. What was Yutu-2 rover sent to do?

- A. To explore the Guanghan Palace. B. To find out what the image was.
C. To prove the experts' guessing. D. To look for mysterious Jade Rabbit.

30. What is the cause of the geometric shape?

- A. The Chinese folk tales. B. The Yutu2's wrong position.
C. The rough surface of the moon. D. The effect of angle, light and shadow.

31. Which is the most suitable title for the text?

- A. A New Scientific Research. B. Yutu-2 Rover's Mission.
C. The Solution of a Mystery. D. The Secret of the Moon.

We are what we eat. From high-calorie meals to low-fat lunches, much of our health depends on what we eat. We all know about the benefits of eating properly for our physical health, but food—and cooking it—is proving to be good for our mental well-being as well.

Some people are now advocating the therapy(治疗) value of cooking food. It's not just about the end result but the experience we go through. Dr Mark Salter told BBC: "Baking and cooking are good therapies that help develop planning skills, short-term memory and social skills—all of which suffer in mental illness."

TV chef and author Nadiya Hussain agrees that cooking is great for helping our mind. She loves to bake and became the champion of the TV show, The Great British Bake Off. "Baking has always been about therapy. It's never really been about the cake", she said. And she thinks that baking is an important tool for our socialization and mental health.

Certainly, creating delicious food has helped take our mind off things and given us something to do. People have said that preparing dough to make bread, for example, has given them a sense of calm and control. Research has shown that doing creative tasks, like cooking, makes us feel happier. Nicole Farmer, who studies how food impacts our biology, behaviour and mental health, told BBC online that "cooking represents the shared human experience of food, and nurturing people through food, so I think that's where it brings us an opportunity for immediate positive emotions."

Of course, cooking can be a very sociable activity and sharing the end result, a rewarding experience. Hopefully, as we start to mix with friends and family again, we can enjoy the benefits once more and put us all in the right frame of mind.

32. What is the text mainly about?

- A. Cooking benefiting mental health. B. Different opinions on cooking.
C. Benefits of food for physical health. D. An author's cooking experience.

33. What does Dr Mark Salter talk about?

- A. The therapy value of cooking. B. The enjoyment of cooking.
C. The types of mental disease. D. The physical benefits of food.

34. What do the underlined words "the cake" refer to in Paragraph 3?

- A. Food quality. B. The end result. C. The TV show. D. The champion.

35. What does Nicole Farmer mean about cooking?

- A. It is a sociable activity. B. It gives us delicious food.
C. It is the process of creation. D. It results in a pleasant feeling.

We all know that honesty is an important value, and that lying is wrong. 36 Researchers find that we tell on average four lies every day or almost 1,500 every year.

37 If people tell lies to make others feel better and won't bring any negative effect, we call them white lies. On contrary to white lies, which refers to well-intentioned lies, black lies are told to deceive someone else for their own advantage. No doubt that black lies are harmful, but not white lies.

Lies are often tied in with self-protection. 38 If they feel that they might be hurt, they immediately begin to lie. Also, we all have our own privacy. Maybe parts of the privacy are embarrassing and shameful and we would not like to give them all out. So we tell lies to protect ourselves.

On some occasions, it is necessary to tell lies to avoid hurting others' feelings, particularly when the truth is too miserable to accept. If we tell the truth, people will get hurt. 39 Of course, it's Ok to tell lies to make them feel better.

Anyhow, we should always keep in mind that honesty is the best policy. As a rule, we should try our best to tell the truth and do all times. If there were no lies, could the world be better? I don't think so. 40

- A. Tell the truth or lie?

D. For most of us, it is an escape from reality.

Bryan Anderson was driving his Pontiac to work. He saw an old lady stopping at the side of the road. She looked worried. Bryan knew immediately that she needed help. So he stopped near her expensive car and got out.

Bryan smiled, as he was approaching the old lady. But she still looked worried. Nobody had stopped to help her for hours. Moreover, he didn't look safe, as his appearance was so poor and shabby. He could see how frightened she was. So he tried to calm her: "Don't worry. I'm here to help you. My name is Bryan Anderson."

The tire (轮胎) was flat. He had to crawl under the car to change the tire. He got dirty and had his hands hurt. When the work was done, the old lady asked how much she owed him for his help. Bryan just smiled and said: "If you really want to pay me back, the next time you see someone who needs help, give that person the needed assistance. Just think of me!"

In the same evening, the lady had her meal in a small cafe. The place looked a little dirty. Then she saw a waitress, nearly eight months with a baby, wiping her wet hair with a towel. The waitress had a sweet friendly smile, though she had worked hard the whole day. The old lady thought of Bryan. She knew what she could do to help her.
