Doing Housework at Home

A survey has been conducted among 2,000 high school students recently on their housework engagement. The findings are as follows.

As we can see from the chart, most of the students (90%) do the housework, among whom 30% work for 1-2 hours per week and 60% for less than an hour. Meanwhile, 10% of them never share housework with their parents.

The data sounds a warning to us. It's really necessary to raise children's labor consciousness and involve them in housework. After all, by helping with the housework, they can develop a sense of responsibility and gain important life skills.

One possible version:

Cuyo took a deep breath and stretched out his arm. "I can do it! I can do it!" he repeated. He closed his eyes and forced his hand into the hole. No stings! The smoke worked. Reaching as far as he could, he pulled out several large pieces of the honeycomb filled with sticky honey. Grandfather said, "That's fine. We need to leave enough for the bees." They backed away from the hole just as the bees started to make noise again.

Grandfather put most of the honeycomb inside his container. He handed Guyo a piece. "Give this to the honeyguide." Guyo placed the piece at the base of the tree where the honeyguide sat. "Thank you for sharing this treasure with us." The honeyguide dropped to the ground to eat his reward. As they walked home, Grandfather placed a hand on Guyo's shoulder. "We'll be able to sell the honey in the village. It's a great help having you around." Guyo smiled, "I guess being little is sometimes a good thing."
