

2023 年高考考前适应性训练考试（二）

英语参考答案

第一部分 听力

1—5 CABCC 6—10 CBCAB 11—15BACAA 16—20BAABC

第二部分 阅读

21—25ADBBBD 26—30AABBA 31—35 CCCDD 36—40DGBCA

第三部分 语言运用第一节 完形填空

41—45BCDCA 46—50ABCDA 51—55BABDD

第二节 语篇填空

56.produced 57.times 58.an 59.is based 60.where

61.reminding 62.to 63.inspiration 64.have proved 65.latest

第四部分 写作第一节

Dear fellow students,

Today, we have invited Mr. Smith to deliver an online lecture themed "Learn to Appreciate English Poetry", which will last two hours. It's a great privilege for us and let's show our warm welcome!

Mr. Smith is a well-known poet, and he will illustrate the connotations of poems in structure, imagery, and rhyme by sharing his own poems. Thus, it is a great opportunity for us to gain a deeper appreciation of English poetry as a form of literature and the skills to produce own poetry in English.

I hope all in attendance will participate positively and follow his instructions as requested. You may also take notes if necessary. There will be a five-minute question-and-answer session following the lecture, which will afford you an opportunity to ask questions and actively participate in the discussion.

Thanks for your attention!

ChatGPT 版本

Dear listeners,

I am the head of the school's English Learning Club. Today, I am honored to invite Mr. Smith to give us a special lecture entitled "Learn to Appreciate English Poetry". Here, on behalf of the Learning Club, I would like to extend a warm welcome and thanks to Mr. Smith!

Mr. Smith is a very senior English poetry enthusiast and expert. He has held many similar lectures at home and abroad, which has been welcomed and praised by the audience. Today, he will share with us his understanding and appreciation of English poetry, which I believe will bring us a lot of gains and inspiration.

Before the hearing, I would like to remind you of the following points:

First of all, listen carefully and take notes as much as possible. Mr. Smith's lecture is very wonderful. There will be a lot of in-depth analysis and interpretation of the appreciation and understanding of English poetry. I hope you can listen carefully and take notes, which will be very helpful for our future learning and improvement.

Secondly, actively participate in interaction and discussion. In the lecture, we will arrange some time for interaction and discussion. You can share your views and ideas, and have in-depth exchanges and discussions with Mr. Smith, which will make our gains richer and deeper.

Finally, I hope everyone can be patient and focused. English poetry is a highly artistic form of expression. Sometimes it is difficult to understand and appreciate, but as long as we are patient and focused, we will definitely gain more knowledge and experience.

Thank you for coming. Let's look forward to Mr. Smith's lecture together!

第二节

As she eyed the area from a distance, panic set in. Jobie picked up the pace, her heart pounding louder the closer she got. When she reached the place she had left them, her heart almost stopped. "They're gone!" she screamed. "My lucky spikes are gone." Fear crept over her as she anxiously circled the whole area and scanned for any splash of neon-green. Jobie's teammates helped her search the park, trying to find any trace of the spikes but in vain. No lucky spikes. By nightfall, the poor girl had no choice but to drag her bare feet home. "So long, gold." Jobie groaned.

The next day, Jobie turned up in a new pair of spikes for the championships. In her brand-new shoes, she accepted the reality that this was not a game of chance. Teammates patted her back as she slowly walked down to the starting line, which also instilled great power in her. Starting buzzer going Jobie was off in a flash. She set focus on the finishing line, leaving behind any self-doubt or worry until she finally breasted the tape earlier than anyone else. In the cheers and shouts, Jobie squatted to untie her spikes as usual only to realize that there was no such thing as lucky spikes and that success was never a stroke of luck.

