Dear John,

I am more than delighted to know that you have entered the Chinese composition final. Congratulations on you! To help you do better in it, I'm writing to offer my suggestions, which are listed as follows.

First of all, it is recommended that your handwriting should be tidy and beautiful so as to leave a good impression on the judges. What's more, in order to catch the judges' eyes, you'd better make your writing content as real and interesting as possible. In addition, it's a good idea for the language to be vivid and humorous, enabling your composition to stand out easily.

Hopefully, you can find my suggestions helpful. Wish you a great success in the final.

Soon it was time for basketball practice. Edward held the ball with sweaty hands, standing on the court nervously. "Stay cool and focused. Those rules work in basketball, too, Leon said: "Let's start from the basics." With Leon's patient instructions, Edward started to practice dribbling. At first, Edward would get frustrated because he couldn't remember all the steps. But after attentive practice, his performance changed for the better. The next two weeks saw the two brothers inspiring each other and making progress steadily. Edward learned how to shoot, pass and rebound; Leon was able to solve more and more complicated word problems.

The morning of the maths test came all too soon for Leon. "Stay cool and focused!" With Edwards encouraging words echoing in his mind, Leon calmed down and buried himself in the questions. Eventually, he finished the paper with flying colors. The bell ringing, Leon handed in the paper, darted out of the classroom and went to Edward. He invited Edward to play basketball with him after school. At the court, Leon's friends were amazed by how much Edward had improved. They had so much fun! "That was pretty good for a maths genius, said Leon as he and Edward headed home. "Just like your maths grade! It was a pretty good grade for a basketball all-star."
