Dear Bob,

I have good news for you. An exhibition of Chinese painting opens next week at the City Exhibition Center, where you can not only appreciate varieties of Chinese paintings, but also attend lectures on Chinese painting. Furthermore, there is a Chinese painting class in which you can learn painting skills if you want to try your hand at Chinese painting.

So why don't you go to the exhibition? It's really a good opportunity for you, since you are so interested in Chinese painting. I'm sure you will enjoy the unique beauty of it.

I'm looking forward to your reply.

Yours,

Li Hua

She found Caper sitting in front of the door, with a notebook in his mouth. “Why are you here, Caper?” Mrs. Lee swelled with confusion and couldn’t help asking more. Suddenly, the dog-ear in the notebook attracted her attention. She took the notebook and quickly opened it, only to find a message from Willie, which said, “Mum, come to me! I am in a shaft in the pasture.” “Caper, can you take me to find your little master?” asked Mrs. Lee anxiously. The honest friend wagged his tail, seeming to understand her words. He turned around and ran forward fast. Mrs. Lee followed him to the far corner of the pasture and there was Willie, alive and well, in the shaft. How glad he was when his mother caught him in her arms and lifted him out!

Willie told Mum how he came up with the idea after he was success fully rescued. After he and Caper both fell into the shaft, he tried to calm himself down and think of how to get out. A good idea occurred to him when he touched the notebook in his pocket. He took it out, wrote down the message, dog-eared the page and said to Caper, “Caper, I will help you out! Remember you have to go home and give the notebook to Mum!” Then he bent down, lifted the dog up with all his strength, raised himself upon tiptoe and helped him out. Having heard this, Mrs. Lee gave the clever boy a warm hug, praising, “Well done, Willie!”
