第一节（15 分）

Dear Jenny,

Thank you very much for inviting me to visit the museum with you this weekend. It sounds like a great plan and I appreciate your kindness. But unfortunately I won't be able to join you this time because I have to rehearse an English drama with my classmates. I feel sorry for letting you down and hope you can understand my situation.

However, I'd love to have the opportunity to visit the museum with you another time. Maybe we can arrange another date that suits both of us.

Thank you again for your kind invitation, and I'm looking forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours sincerely,
Li Hua

第二节 读后续写（25 分）

The clerk listened carefully, and then asked me to wait. I didn't know what he would do, just standing there anxiously. A moment later, I was about to leave when the clerk came back, followed by a middle-aged smart man dressed formally. The clerk introduced his manager to me, who listened to my unfortunate experience patiently. The manager looked at me with a kind smile and said. "Don't worry. We are willing to offer you a room for the night free of charge."

I was deeply moved by the manager's kindness and generosity. Words failed to express my gratitude and I just kept repeating "Thank you." I never thought good fortune would happen to me, especially in a strange place. Finally it was with the help of the clerk and the manager that I lived comfortably in the hotel that night. When I arrived back at my apartment, I immediately wrote a letter to the manager, thanking him for his kindness and explaining how much it had meant to me. Many years later, their welcoming smile was still deeply rooted in my heart.
