A Youth Volunteer Activity Celebrating World Water Day

To mark World Water Day, which falls annually on March 22, the Students' Union of our school organized a publicity campaign in the downtown area last Sunday morning.

Exhibition boards were set up showcasing water's critical importance to human survival and prosperity, as well as China's progress in water resource protection and water pollution prevention and control. Youth volunteers also distributed leaflets to the passers-by, popularizing knowledge about how to save water in everyday life.

The campaign has not only enhanced people's awareness of water conservation and protection, but also further added our sense of social responsibility and historic mission.

As we were approaching the Heathrow turn-off, I had an idea. "Why don't I just drop you at the airport now?" I said. "I'll buy you a ticket and you can fly home." "That's so kind of you," he replied. Then, after a pause, "and please don't worry. I'll definitely wire you the money when I get home." I pulled onto the airport avenue and soon dropped him off outside the terminal building. I went to a cashpoint, got out 10 shiny new £20 notes and handed them over. He took the money and thanked me again and again.

Before he left to buy his air ticket, he gave me a huge hug. He took my phone number and said he'd call as soon as he could to arrange the transfer. I bid farewell to him without any real idea if I'd ever see the man or the money again. As I drove the final miles to my own house in London, I felt happier thinking about Brendan. He asked for help, for a lift to get home, and in good faith I gave them to him. That's got to be a good thing.
