Dear fellow students,

Poetry, the essence of language, is loved by many of us. At some students' request, we're honored to have invited Professor Green to deliver a lecture on how to enjoy English poems, through which we hope to deepen our understanding of poems.

Professor Green is a productive poet, whose works enjoy great popularity. He'll illustrate poems in such aspects as structure, rhyme and image. So it's an opportunity to engage deeply with poetry and appreciate its unique charm.

I hope everyone present can participate positively and take notes if necessary. Besides, feel free to ask questions in the final 10-minute question-and-answer session.

Now let's show our warm welcome!

第二节(满分 25 分) (One possible version)

There was nobody around but the elderly lady. She hurried to him and bent down to check his injury. "God!" she gasped. "Don't move. I'll help you, son." Looking at her kind face, Jack gradually lost consciousness. Having called an ambulance, the lady tended to his wounds carefully. Not until Jack came to and found himself and his belongings in an emergency room did he learn that the lady had contacted his family and quietly left. Overwhelmed by her virtue, Jack was desperate to find her. Fortunately, the rescue scene was wholly recorded by his camera. He posted the video online, requesting clues so that he could say thanks and sorry to her.

To Jack's joy, a net friend sent a message saying where the lady lived. With gifts, Jack headed for the lady's home. Answering the door, the lady was surprised but immediately got aware of what was going on. She gave Jack a hug, saying smilingly, "So glad to see you well, son." "Sorry, I came for apologies. I behaved so rudely ... and thanks for your help. Otherwise..." Jack choked, ashamed and grateful. "Treat others as you'd like to be treated. Everything will change for the better. I have faith in you," she comforted the young man affectionately. The incident dramatically transformed Jack, who became helpful, friendly and popular.
