Sand sculpting is an art form which uses sand as its primary and only material to create pieces of art. Only fresh water or salt water may be used to give the sand its required hardness. This art form allows anyone, amateur and professional artists to create any shape by hand within a short time. No other structural supports and no pre-produced forms of any kind may be used either inside or on the sculpture.

In general, beach sand is not suitable for sand sculpting, because its grains have rounded due to tidal wash and wind, and it contains no clay. The sand used for sculpting must be guaranteed free of toxins. It is processed and washed clean before use. Sand sculpting is only considered when it does not damage the quality of the sand in any circumstance. After use, the sand should be delivered back to nature as clean as it was before use. This makes the art form completely sustainable and friendly to the environment.

The building process of a sand sculpture was developed by Gerry Kirk in the 1970's. It consists of two stages, the compaction (压实) stage and the creative stage. First, the sand is put into wooden forms, mixed with water, and pressed into a hard mass. For sculptures measuring higher than 1.5 meters, heavy machinery is being used to speed up this process. This compaction process is the actual foundation of the sculpture. When this process is finalized up to the very top, the wooden forms are taken off one by one and the artists will start shaping the blocks of sand in its final form, from the top of the sculptures right down to the bottom. The wooden forms can be used to stand on while artists shape the sand.

The lifetime of a sand sculpture mainly depends on the quality of the sand, as well as the weather condition, location and climate. If built indoors under proper conditions, it can last for years.

24. Why is beach sand avoided for sand sculpting?
A. It can't be cleaned. B. It doesn't bond well.
C. Its quantity is small. D. It contains too much water.
25. What does the underlined word "toxins" in paragraph 2 probably mean?
A. Odd shapes. B. Mixed sizes.
C. Harmful substances. D. Environmentally friendly elements.
26. What are the wooden forms used to do during the creative stage?
A. Hold the sand. B. Act as a ladder.
C. Shape the sand. D. Speed sand hardening.
27. Which section of a website can this text come from?
A. Culture. B. Environment. C. Architecture. D. Lifestyle.

Samsung introduced its first foldable smartphone in 2019 with Galaxy Fold. The device was a tech wonder that made the users take notice of its ground-breaking looks and flexibility. Later in 2020, the company took the foldable smartphone technology up a level with its Galaxy Z Fold2 and Galaxy Flip. For the first time, the Galaxy Z series carried a noteworthy IPX8 and water-resistance feature.

With such a strong background, it's time for the brand to floor us once again with its new technology that it has been pursuing. Before diving into the future, let us reflect on how Samsung's foldable devices have truly improved the lives of their users.

Users who love big screens would love the Galaxy Z Fold range. The device would be ideal for individuals who use their phones for work but prefer not to carry a tablet at all times. They are perfect for presenting spreadsheets, or designing complicated artwork. When the phone is not being used, the cover screen, which is sizable enough to function as a standalone smartphone, can be employed instead.

When you're using an app on the cover screen and suddenly opening the device, the app continuity can move the same app to the main screen, allowing you to smoothly restart where you left off on a significantly larger screen.

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Books are a great way to learn new things and explore interesting stories. 36. If you've been looking for a way to help you unwind at the end of the day and fall asleep faster, opening up a good book could do the trick as follows.

You're not exposed to blue light.

We are exposed to blue light so often, which is harmful to the eyes and could create issues later in life. 37, making it more difficult to fall asleep and stay asleep. So open a paper book to set yourself up for a good night's rest.

You may sleep better.

Reading before bed can be helpful in increasing the amount of time it takes to fall asleep. Along with longer sleep duration, reading at bedtime could improve your sleep quality once you doze off (打盹儿). If you've chosen to read something particularly boring, it's likely to put you to sleep even faster. 38. Otherwise, you're more likely to grab your phone and leave the book on your bedside table.

39.

Enjoying a book means being focused on a single plot or topic for several hours, even if we are only reading for 10 to 20 minutes every night. As a result, we become better at concentrating, and we may find that we improve our attention spans in the rest of our daily activities.

Reading boosts your brain power.

Reading allows you to take in new information. The more you learn, the smarter you become. You don't have to read something academic, or even non-fiction, for your brain to benefit. 40.

- A. Reading reduces stress
B. It helps you concentrate better
C. Besides, they offer health benefits as well
D. However, try to choose a book that's interesting to you

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Alice flies regularly on business and her boyfriend Devin always takes her to the airport. One day, when Alice was picking up her ticket at the check-in window, she noticed something odd at the security gate. This was due to a man who had something in his bag that was not allowed on board. She could see that the man became emotional just thinking about leaving the package behind. Even though the man begged for a while, it turned out to be in vain.

The man stepped out of the line. He stood there for several minutes. Then he headed for a trash can and threw the package into it, looking rather sad. Next he went back to the security line.

Alice felt sorry for the man. It occurred to her that maybe she could do something to help him. But now the man was nowhere to be found.

Since it was time for Alice to go through the security gate, she asked Devin to pick up the package from the trash can and see whether they could do something to help that man.

Alice boarded her flight, worrying about that man and his package. As soon as her flight landed, Alice turned on her phone. She saw some pictures that Devin had sent her. Seeing the pictures about the package, Alice came to realize what had made the man at the airport so sad.

After Alice boarded her flight, Devin opened the package. He found a snow globe (玻璃雪球) in it, which looked the same as the one Alice had planned to buy for her niece's birthday. Then Devin discovered the emotional value behind it. It contained a picture of a little girl and an old lady. Furthermore, the globe was carved with the text "I love you Katie. From your grandma Linda Modry".

Devin said he had taken the package back home and maybe a way could be found to help that man.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

After coming back, Alice set out to discover something more about the owner of the snow globe.

Alice got in touch with Linda Modry.
