I'd moved to U. S. to live with my uncle, and one year after that, I lost my vision. I had since learned to get about with a cane, and now I craved getting back to pursue my dream of being a broadcaster.

But my aunt and uncle said it was much too dangerous for me to go out on my own. What if I got hit by a car? I must stay in the house. I was dogged. I rejected their guesses. I believed I could regain my way if I lost it. I told my aunt and uncle I would pay close attention, I would listen and be very careful when crossing streets.

高三英语第2页(共10页)

A public library was offering a tuition-free course on how to use a computer with screen-reading software designed for blind people. This was an important opportunity for me. My aunt and uncle reluctantly agreed.

I knew that the American singer Ray Charles, who was also blind, got around on his own without a cane. If he could do it without a cane, I reasoned, surely I could do it with one. Ray's secret was to count steps. But I couldn't seem to do that the way he had. Instead I captured the layout (布局) of places I visited by taking note of landmarks in my mind. I'd imagine the mental map I'd drawn and use that in order to navigate. Today, I do this automatically.

But that doesn't mean I didn't lose my way many times in the process of acquiring this skill. Sometimes I'd be so discouraged that I'd consider giving up. Maybe I should stay home and wait until someone could help me. On those days when I lost my way, I'd go to bed feeling down. And because I didn't want my uncle to worry about me, I kept that to myself.

Since that time, I've pursued my education. I've earned three academic degrees, including a master's, in face-to-face classrooms. Today, I'm a published journalist and audio producer.

Now, surprised at my progress, my uncle screams to my aunt, "That boy can see!"

C

Researcher Ruijia Hu said wildlife habitat in crowded places like southwest Ohio is becoming increasingly fragmented (分散) as forests give way to new construction. Eventually, this could make trouble to an animal with specific habitat needs like Ohio's pileated (红冠) woodpecker.

Pileated woodpeckers have the nickname carpenter birds for their never-ending natural woodworking. They peck out holes in trees for their nests every year, creating lots of valuable homes for animals like fox squirrels and owls. "They make new nests every year. They won't reuse old ones," Hu said. "Other animals depend on them."

Pileated woodpeckers are private birds that are more often heard than seen. Studying them can be especially difficult. Hu turned to citizen science for help. To identify where woodpeckers have been she used eight years of sightings collected by birders and logged into the website eBird, a free online tool and app that anyone can use to record their observations and locations. She overlaid these sightings with remote sensing data and found that corridors along rivers and creeks with abundant mature trees and deadwood helped the birds adjust to their increasingly fragmented urban landscape.

"With fragmented forests, many habitats that were once suitable for wildlife are broken up," Hu said. "Wildlife is unable to find habitat big enough to meet their survival needs. And even if there are suitable habitats, the distance between them can be too great. Wildlife corridors link up these habitat patches. Since wildlife can travel and migrate from one patch to another, the probability of finding food and shelter is higher."

"There are so many species in urban areas that we don't pay attention to, especially when they're not considered vulnerable," Hu said. "With development chipping away at more forest in this crowded county, the tipping point (临界点) could come quickly and unexpectedly. You can't fix it overnight. It's not just about planting more trees. The birds need mature forest, so it could take 30 to 50 years to replace their habitat. At least we can protect these riverside forest corridors and see that existing trees reach maturity."

8. What can we infer from the second paragraph?

- A. The magpie's nest is occupied by the dove.
- B. Birds abandon the old for the new easily.
- C. Friendship really exists among animals.
- D. One's trash is another's treasure.

9. What is the main idea of the third paragraph?
- A. The effect of Hu's study on birds.
  - B. The process of Hu's research.
  - C. The difficulty Hu had in his study.
  - D. The application of technology.
10. What role do wildlife corridors play for birds?
- A. Helping them survive in the fragmented landscape.
  - B. Making them adjust to deadwood quickly.
  - C. Providing them with enough food for survival.
  - D. Ensuring them a stable and safe habitat.
11. What does Hu imply in the last paragraph?
- A. One tree doesn't make a forest.
  - B. Be wise after the event.
  - C. Prepare for a rainy day.
  - D. Take things as they come.

Have you ever fancied a tennis lesson from one of the world's greatest tennis players at your local court?

This dream came true for two young players, who got to train with 20-year-old superstar Emma Raducanu after she appeared as a hologram (全息图) – a photographic recording of the image. While Sam Clague, 14, and T'nae Diamond Paisley, 12, were both in London, the British number one was in Abu Dhabi.

During the world's first holographic lesson, Ms Raducanu's avatar (头像) appeared to feed balls to the players and gave live feedback on their shots, like 'that was fast' and 'there was lots of topspin on that'. Even Sam said he thought she had been pre-recorded at first until she spoke with him directly.

Their holographic training session offers a glimpse into how advancing technology could revolutionize tennis coaching, according to Dr Ian Pearson.

Dr Pearson thinks that mixed reality headsets will soon allow tennis players to feel they are playing in unusual virtual environments, like on a space station or the middle of a lake. Through 5G, the future of tennis will see increased interaction between real life tennis courts and the rich imagination we see in computer games – playing whenever, wherever and whoever you want.

Full sensory virtual reality could even place the viewer inside the tennis player's shoes in real time. Dr Pearson said: "By 2030, with active skin technology, the playing styles and even the sensations of top-level players could be captured, so that anyone could experience how it actually felt to play that game through full sensory virtual reality."

Finally, sportswear made from smart materials could allow for a digital coach powered by artificial intelligence (AI) to provide feedback on a player's form. Dr Pearson said: "AI-controlled suits made from smart materials, such as fabrics with sensors, can help players find the perfect stroke when hitting or returning a serve by quickly learning the muscle memory of a flawless forehand. Using direct feedback from friendly virtual AI coaches, new players can develop and learn much more quickly."

12. What did Ms Raducanu do in the first holographic lesson?

- A. Give players a real time guidance.
- B. Require players to follow her shots.
- C. Record coaching contents in advance.
- D. Analyze techniques through the hologram.

13. What can full sensory virtual reality make viewers do?

- A. Increase their imagination of sports.
- B. Take the place of top level players.
- C. Experience the feeling of players on the spot.
- D. Have a sense of playing in an unusual place.

14. What's Dr Pearson's attitude towards virtual AI coaches?

- A. Critical.
- B. Skeptical.
- C. Cautious.
- D. Favorable.

15. What might be the best title for the text?

- A. The future of coaching.
- B. The threat from AI to coaches.
- C. The first live coaching online.
- D. The appearance of digital coaches.

第二节(共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

You want to go vegan to help the planet, but it is your parents who are paying for the shopping. You think trains are better than planes when traveling. 16 Young people are some of the world's most powerful climate leaders and want rapid action to tackle the problem.

17 But the power to act is often still in the hands of older people, including parents. Big changes are difficult, especially when they involve other people. Where do you begin?

Eating less meat is one of the best ways to reduce our impact on the planet. Teach the Parent is a campaign that encourages these conversations between generations. It was started by young people frustrated with the lack of international climate action and their feelings of powerlessness. Even if your first talk with your parent goes badly, you should keep going.

18 If you bring it up every so often, it shapes your parent's attitudes in the long term.

How we travel is a major source of carbon emissions, but switching from driving or flying can potentially cut family holidays and cost more. Present a solution rather than just a problem. 19 For example, saying "let's do this thing instead" is really a good way to communicate. People talk about how expensive trains are, but think about what the carbon emissions from taking a plane mean in the long term for us.

Radically reducing what we buy and throw away can improve our carbon footprint, but it can be time-consuming and difficult. Advise your parents to reduce food waste and think more carefully about what they buy. Be well-informed about the things you want your family to start changing so they can see you care and have done some research. It's important to not go into it expecting your parents to change their whole lives. 20

Taking action as an individual means you have managed to feel a lot more in control of your future.

- A. That makes a lot of sense.
- B. Big lifestyle changes take time.
- C. Small things can make a difference.
- D. It's a big bother for you and your parents.
- E. Give your parents options for something fun or exciting.
- F. The conversations can be challenging at times.
- G. However, your dad books the summer holiday.

"Where will all this money come from?" James told his father the solution to the problem. He said, "Father! If I have studied 10 and 12 well, then I can study in a good government college for free, but for this I have to leave my village and go to some city and study."

Hearing this, James' father said, "Son! For this I will mortgage (抵押) all my land". And it happened. James' father mortgaged all his land. Then he sent James to the city.
