Best Films to Watch in 2022

Jurassic World: Dominion

It is the final film in the second trilogy (三部曲) of dinosaur-movies. It's the first one that really deserves to be called "Jurassic World" rather than "Jurassic Park". Yes, prehistoric dinosaurs appear in the wild this time, rather than being stuck in a theme park. What's even more exciting is that the (human) stars from the first Jurassic film have reunited.

Release date: 10 June, internationally

Director: Colin Trevorrow

Official Competition

Cruz and Banderas have been two of Spanish cinema's most famous superstars for decades, and yet have rarely acted on screen together. Now, once again, that wrong has been corrected by Official Competition, a good movie-business satire (讽刺作品). Cruz plays a director who is adapting a Nobel Prize-winning novel. Banderas is a Hollywood action hero who is hired to star in it.

Release date: 1 June in France, 9 June in Singapore, 17 June in the US and 30 June in Germany

Director: Mariano Cohn & Gastón Duprat

Brian and Charles

Not a typical science-fiction movie, Brian and Charles is a low-cost British comedy starring and co-written by David Earl, a regular in situation comedies. "Brian and Charles is this year's sweetest film," says Cory. "It's like an Edgar Wright's Mighty Boosh project thrown into a cotton-candy machine, but also one of the most surprising films about being a parent, even when your son is a 7 feet-tall robot who loves cabbages."

Release date: 17 June in the US and Canada

Director: Jim Archer

You just never know when a skill you learned decades ago might come in handy.

Rosa was spending the day with her family at Thetis Lake when she heard a man crying out for help. The lake has a sudden drop-off, and the man was desperately trying to keep himself, his wife, and their son afloat. Rosa handed off her 4-month-old daughter to her mother and dashed down the hill and into the water.

Without thinking, Rosa dove into the water and swam hard for the family. When she reached them, they were so panicked that they repeatedly pushed her under the water, but Rosa didn't give up. She tried to remember her lifeguard training—which was a long time ago when she was a teenager. Rosa was aiming for the drop-off ledge (平台), hoping to get the adults to a spot where they could touch the bottom. Yet as she approached the drop-off, Rosa couldn't summon the strength to haul them all up. That's when she heard the bystanders calling out encouragement from the shore. They responded by forming a human chain to drag Rosa and the family to shore!

Once they were safely out of the water, the family expressed their gratitude to Rosa and the others while gasping for breath. Rosa was relieved that those long-ago lessons returned to her when she needed them most, especially because she was never formally taught how to rescue groups! The heroic mom has now made it her mission to improve the safety of Thetis Lake. She's requested more signage about the water drop-off and is campaigning to get lifeguards at beaches in the region.

Rosa insists she was just at the right place at the right time and says anyone would have done what she did, but we know a hero when we see one! Thank goodness this tough mother was there when that family needed her.

There are 7,000 documented languages currently spoken across the world, but half of them could be endangered. It is predicted that 1,500 known languages may no longer be spoken by the end of this century.

Researchers analyzed thousands of languages to identify factors that put endangered ones at risk. The findings highlight a link between higher levels of schooling and language loss, as regionally dominant languages taught in class often overshadow indigenous (土著的) tongues. Additionally, the density of roads in an area is also to blame. "We found that the more roads there are, connecting countries to cities, and villages to towns, the higher the risk of languages being endangered. It's as if roads are helping dominant languages 'steam roll' over other smaller languages," said Professor Lindell Bromham, co-author of the study.

The study, published in Nature, Ecology and Evolution, estimates one language is currently lost within every three-month period. But levels of language loss could actually triple in the next 40 years, with at least one language per month disappearing unless measures are taken.

"When a language is lost, we lose so much of our human cultural diversity," said Professor Bromham. "Luckily, many of the languages predicted to be lost this century still have fluent speakers, so there is still the chance to invest in supporting communities to restore indigenous languages."

There are many Internet sites and apps to help new speakers learn languages like Spanish, English and Chinese, but these now extend to specialist apps designed to teach endangered languages or help preserve them. Ma! Iwaidja, for example, is an app that enables those working with speakers of the Iwaidja indigenous Australian language to record words, phrases and translations. Another initiative is the Rosetta Project, a global cooperation of language specialists and native speakers working to build an open-access digital library of human languages.

The UNESCO International Decade of Indigenous Languages (IDIL 2022-2032), which begins this year, also aims to engage the global community with the critical issue of language loss.

根据短文内容,从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Self-concept is how we perceive our behaviors, abilities, and unique characteristics. For example, beliefs such as "I am a good friend" or "I am a kind person" are part of an overall self-concept. 36 It also affects how we feel about the person we think we are, including whether we are competent or if we have self-worth.

37 Ideal self: The ideal self is the person you want to be. Self-image: It refers to how you see yourself at this moment in time. Self-esteem: How much you like, accept, and value yourself all contribute to your self-concept.

Self-concept develops, in part, through our interaction with others. 38 For instance, one study found that the more a teacher believes in a high-performing student's abilities, the higher that student's self-concept will be.

39 The media plays a role in self-concept development as well—both mass media and social media. 39 And the more often these ideals are presented, the more they affect our self-identity and self-perception.

Self-concept can change. Our environment plays a role in this process. Places that hold a lot of meaning to us actively contribute to our future self-concept through both the way we relate these environments to ourselves and how society relates to them. 40 This is particularly true with regard to individuals in our lives who are in leadership roles. They can impact the collective self (the self in social groups) and the relational self (the self in relationships).

- A. Self-concept can develop in a number of ways.
B. It helps people understand why they feel the way they do.
C. It is believed that self-concept is made up of three different parts.
D. Self-concept can also change based on the people with whom we interact.
E. Our self-concept is important because it affects our attitudes and behaviors.
F. When these media promote certain ideals, we're more likely to make them our own.
G. Our family members, close friends and even others can contribute to our self-concept.

Spreading Kindness Around the World

"Mom, we want to write a book," my five-year-old twins, Delilah and Nathaniel, told me one day.

I looked at my kids curiously. "What do you mean?"

Are they joking? I thought. I don't know the first thing about getting a book published. Still, I didn't want to squash their creativity. "Okay...what do you want it to be about?"

"An envelope that travels all over the world spreading kindness," Nathaniel said, his eyes shining.

Over the next few months, my kids dreamed up more of the story. The main characters were a pair of twins just like them. I wrote down everything, making sure not to miss a detail. The kids even sketched scenes with colored pencils.

The theme of Delilah and Nathaniel's story was being kind to others, no matter how little you might have. I wondered if that was partly because I'd told them what my life had been like when I was their age.

I remember my father died when I was five. My mom, younger sister and I ended up on the streets, sleeping in parks and homeless hotels for more than a year. I found myself standing in any line I could to get donated food.

Despite—or maybe because of—our hardships, I tried to help others. I handed out snacks to people who were homeless, took in stray(走失的) animals and helped give out donations at a church where the woman in charge would send me home with food. After I gave birth to our twins, I not only taught them to be kind but also to make sure they knew that anything was possible.

I guess I did a pretty good job, because here the twins were, at age five, managed to write a book. After we self-published The Magical Envelope last Children's Day, the kids decided to donate it to the kindergarten in our community.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

The twins, now eight, continue to amaze me.

My kids understand more about the hardship I endured.
