第一节

Dear Steve,

Thank you for caring about my major option.

With so many majors to choose from, I feel it important and challenging to make a decision. Everything taken into account, I would like to major in medicine at college. The reasons are listed as follows.

First, both my parents are medical workers, who have great influences on me. Besides, I do well in science in my study, which may contribute to the major. What's more, it is doctors and nurses that heal the wounded and rescue the dying, especially during the pandemic, and I want to be one of them.

I will spare no effort to work for my ideal major and make my dream come true.

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节

In their apartment, Mr. Chen spread the broken pieces out like a jigsaw puzzle. Taking a thin knife, Mr. Chen spreads lacquer across the sharp edges. He finds two parts that fit and begins to delicately rebuild the curve of the bowl. "Now you try," he says. I reach for a long, smooth section and place it at the rim. Slowly, gently, we twist and turn the pieces, finding each match. It's tricky but also kind of fun. When our puzzle is complete, the bowl is together again. "This needs to dry. Come back on Saturday, and we will finish it," says Mr. Chen. Saturday morning, I sneak out early and knock on the Mr Chen' door. "Now comes my favorite part," says him, as he mixes a tray of lacquer and shimmering gold powder. "Take your time, and fill in the crack lines." At first my hand is shaking, but then I paint with smooth strokes. When I'm finished, the bowl looks completely different. Instead of the cracks blending in and disappearing, now you can see exactly where it was broken.

"This bowl has another layer to its history--it has been broken, repaired, and is prettier because of it." said Mr. Chen while he was sending me out. I'm a little nervous to show Mom the bowl, but that night I bring it into her room. She runs her fingertip over the golden veins. "Mr. Chen helped me fix it," I say. "It's so beautiful," she replies. "A new beginning." I sit on the edge of her bed, and Mom reaches out to me. Our hands join with crisscrossed fingers. Maybe it finally does feel like a fresh start. "The bowl is stronger like this too," I say. "Now the cracks are what's holding it together."
