Mürren, Switzerland

In Mürren, the fun starts before you arrive. This beautiful Swiss village sits on a Bernese Oberland mountain shelf so high that travelers must arrive by cable car. Like many mountain resort towns these days, Mürren offers year round activities. Besides downhill skiing in winter, brave climbers can enjoy themselves from June to October, with or without a guide.

San Gimignano, Italy

In the Middle Age, wealthy families of this hill town went on a tower-building competition. At one point there were more than 70 towers, some of which were nearly 200 feet in height. Initially built as defenses in wars with neighboring villages, the towers became symbols of wealth and fame. Today, the village draws both history and wine lovers. Visitors can enjoy the famous white wine, Vernaccia di San Gimignano, at the tasting centers which overlook the surrounding grape hills.

Chipping Campden, England

Arguably the loveliest village in England, Chipping Campden isn't just a photographer's dream. It is also known for the annual Olimpick Games in summer, a 400-year tradition that copies the Greek Olympics. It includes horseracing, coursing, jumping, backswords and country dancing. Thomas Lanier Williams was born on March 26, 1911 in the Mississippi town of Columbus. In half a century, he created some of the most remarkable characters in his more than 70 plays, including Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, Sweet Bird of Youth and The Night of the Iguana.

"He changed the history of American drama with his first two plays because they were so different," says Kenneth Holditch, editor of The Collected Plays of Tennessee Williams. "He broke free of what had been going on in the 1920s and the 1930s and gave us a wonderful understanding of human nature and human tragedy(悲剧)..."

Holditch is referring to The Glass Menagerie and Summer and Smoke. The first play won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award for best play of 1945. It tells the story of the shy, physically disabled girl, Laura.

Williams' sympathy for the underdogs grew out of his own experience. His father drank heavily and argued bitterly with his mother. When the young boy began writing poetry, he laughed at him. In a 1973 interview, Williams told filmmaker Harry Rasky that only his sister Rose became his closest friend.

"My sister and I were unusually close as children," Williams recalled. "My sister and I grew so used to being company for each other that we tended to rely on each other's companionship rather than seeking friends outside the household."

By the time he changed his name to Tennessee and moved to New Orleans in 1939, his sister Rose became mentally ill. Tennessee was not at home when this happened, and he always felt somehow responsible for that. So he kept writing about her. The image of Rose turned up in every single play he wrote. For example, Laura in Menagerie was modeled on Rose. At the end of the play, he wrote: "... everything reminded me of her. Perhaps it was a familiar music; perhaps only a little piece of glass..."

Tennessee Williams died alone in a New York hotel room in 1983 and was buried alongside his sister Rose.

24. Which play won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award?

- A. The Glass Menagerie, B. Sweet Bird of Youth.
C. Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, D. Summer and Smoke.

26. What can be learned from paragraph 6?

- A. Rose was an inspiration for her brother's plays.
B. Tennessee Williams kept writing letters to his sister.
C. Rose was a talented girl and helped her brother a lot.
D. Tennessee Williams was responsible for Rose's illness.

27. Most of Tennessee Williams' plays can most probably be classified as _____.

On Tuesday, NASA sent up a test satellite from New Zealand as part of its experiment with a new orbit around the moon that it hopes to use in the coming years to land astronauts on the lunar surface. If the rest of the mission is successful, the satellite will be the first to take the new path around the moon and will send back vital information for at least six months. However, getting the 25-kilogram satellite into orbit will take more than four months and be done in three stages.

First, the small Electron rocket was launched from New Zealand. Just nine minutes later, the second-stage rocket called Photon separated and went into orbit around the earth.

Over the next five days, Photon's engines are scheduled to fire on a regular basis to raise its orbit further and further from the earth. Six days after the launch, Photon's engines will fire a final time, allowing it to escape the earth's orbit and head for the moon.

Finally, Photon will release the satellite, which has its own small engine that won't use much energy as it travels toward the moon over four months, with a few planned course corrections along the way.

"The new orbit seems like a stretched-out egg with one end passing close to the moon and the other far from it," NASA wrote on its website. "This path-finding satellite will be put in a sweet spot in space—where the pull of gravity from the earth and the moon interacts to allow for a stable orbit."

NASA spokesperson Morgan Bailey said that eventually, NASA plans to put a space station called Gateway into the orbital path, from which astronauts can travel to the moon's surface as part of its Artemis program.

"One of the advantages of the orbit is that a space station should be able to stay in continuous communication with the earth," said Morgan Bailey. "Because it will avoid being blocked by the moon."

28. How long will it take NASA to get the satellite to "the sweet spot"?

- A. About six days. B. At least six months.
C. Around five days. D. More than four months.

【高三第二次联考试卷·英语 第4页(共8页)】

29. When will the satellite's engine start working?
- A. At the first stage. B. At the second stage.
C. At the third stage. D. At the fourth stage.
30. What does the underlined word "it" in paragraph 5 refer to?
- A. NASA. B. The satellite. C. The moon. D. The new orbit.
31. What is an advantage of putting Gateway in the new orbit?
- A. It will be able to escape the pull of the earth. B. It will be the closest to the moon all the time.
C. It does not need corrections to stay in the orbit. D. It can communicate conveniently with the earth.

On the day of the San Francisco Giants' World Series parade(游行), I made my way to the corner of the street where I was sure I could have a good position to watch the players drive by in their cars. Then the parade started and thousands of arms extended towards the sky. And just like that, none of us could see the parade. Only our phones could.

Don't get me wrong. I needed my phone to keep in touch with my colleagues, friends and my family. But once the parade began, my phone went from being a useful tool to being a distraction.

I knew the photos I'd take with my phone's camera would pale in comparison to the footage I'd see on the news that night. Most importantly, I knew this gathering of thousands of people in the streets was really more about experiencing the energy than recording the visuals. All of that pre-parade analysis went out of the window once the first band marched past me. The recording device was just too close. I just couldn't resist. I took about 40 photos and shot about 20 minutes of video. Then I stared at my phone for 30 minutes and missed the experience I was there for in the first place.

A few decades ago, my friend Isaac and I cut school and went to watch the same parade. This was before smartphones and neither of us had a camera. I don't remember a single visual from that day. But I do remember the feeling. I especially remember the feeling I had after I arrived home to find my parents, who had no way of reaching me all day, waiting just inside my front door.

Of course, it is OK to take a few photos on special occasions. But it seems that we've developed such a fear of missing the photo opportunity that we have missed the real life moments as they pass across the two-inch screens on our phones.

32. What does the underlined word "distraction" in paragraph 2 probably mean?
- A. Something that makes you feel extremely angry.
B. Something relaxing you do after you have been working.
C. A game or an activity that provides entertainment and pleasure.
D. A thing that takes your attention away from what you want to focus on.
33. What had the author planned to do before he went to the parade?
- A. Keep his phone in his pants. B. Take as many photos as possible.
C. Throw his phone out of the window. D. Study the videos just for 30 minutes.
34. What does the author want to tell us in paragraph 4?
- A. He missed his parents very much. B. Life in the past was much happier.
C. It was inconvenient without phones. D. It is important to experience the visuals.
35. How is text developed?
- A. By reasoning. B. By giving examples.
C. By analyzing data. D. By experimenting.
