Dear Ross,

How are you going recently? Considering that you take an interest in classical movies, I'm writing to recommend a wonderful movie to you.

Based on Mark Twain's novel, the film The Million Pound Bank Note makes us get closer to England in the late 1800s. The story centered on a poor but honest American Henry who landed in Britain by accident. It was due to his optimistic attitude that he not only made a fortune but also won the love of an elegant beauty. To my satisfaction, the movie ended with a happy ending. What impressed me most was the vivid, humorous and ironic description of different people's ridiculous actions before the note.

In my opinion, it is well worth enjoying, and can help you have a better understanding of British culture, so don't miss it and please share your opinions about it with me.

Looking forward to your reply

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节 读后续写（满分 25 分）

She sat up in the silent night and Stephen was sound asleep. She got out of the bedroom and ran to the poor trout with a pot. Although she was scared in the darkness, a sense of responsibility welled up in her heart. “Never can the small hole be your prison.” She murmured to the panting creature, “but how can I rescue you from the deep hole?” Suddenly, it dawned on her that maybe she could fill the hole with water like a fairy. Next three hours witnessed Julia’s effort in filling the hole with the water fetched from the river nearby. Finally, she grasped it, put it into the pot and raced out to the river.

Julia poured the trout out of the pot into the river. Staring at the disappearing trout, Julia was in great joy, a wave of happiness flooding over her. Without any delay, she charged back home like an arrow (箭) and announced the news to the whole family. Having confirmed what she had done, her parents gave a thumbs up (竖起大拇指) to praise her. “You must be the very fairy.” yelled Stephen, his eyes twinkling like a diamond. The bright smile from everyone lit up The Dark Walk. Hadn’t it been for Julia’s bravery and Mom’s weird (离奇的, 怪诞的) story, the trout couldn’t have run through the dark hole towards the light river.
