第四部分 写作（共两节，满分 40 分）

第一节（满分 15 分）

One possible version:

Dear classmates,

Our group has just had a heated discussion about whether frequency repetition plays a key role in learning English, and now on behalf of our group, I'd like to present our view.

In short, we believe frequency repetition is needed but never indispensable. We cannot deny that frequency repetition is helpful in memorizing words and expressions, but learning English needs much more than that. It's better to start with a curious mind, and then determination and perseverance to carry on. Well, thinking ability and quality learning methods are also important.

I drew some inspirations from our discussion. In the past, I just learned English by frequency repetition, and now I need to equip myself with better learning methods, and critical thinking. Most importantly, nothing can stop a willing heart.

Thanks for listening!

第二节 (满分 25 分)

One possible version:

After a year, she signed up for a training unit for firefighters. No sooner had she stepped into the training venue than she found all her classmates were 18—22 young kids. “Could I really make it?” Peterson thought to herself, struggling. At the very moment, she was once again thought of the firm and courageous eyes of the firefighters who came to rescue her over 50 years ago. She instantly rolled up her sleeves and began to learn both theoretical and practical knowledge as her much younger peers.

Finally came the written and physical fitness test day. For Peterson, she was at an advantageous situation for the theoretical part, as her past rescue experiences on ambulance ride-along made her a qualified rescuer already. However, the 3-km running, push-ups, sit-ups, etc. all behaved as huge gaps awaiting her to conquer. Though she ranked the last among such items, her persistence, endurance as well as the passion for a childhood dream made her name appear on the list of newly-announced firefighters. This time, tears blurred her eyes, as the dream born in the fire was eventually fulfilled.
