第二部分 阅读理解(共两节,满分40分)

第一节 (共15小题;每小题2分,满分30分)

阅读下列短文,从每题所给的A、B、C和D四个选项中,选出最佳选项。

A

Northern Michigan knows how to celebrate summer's arrival. This month, join a decades-long party that greets the sun, a traditional cannon(大炮) firing and the cheering on of a ferry(渡船) launch.

Fort Mackinac

It's a tradition for the Lilac Queen to fire the first cannon when Fort Mackinac opens for the season. This year brings back a popular program that lets visitors learn to drill like an 1880s soldier, as well as a new reading room offering the chance to learn history through newspapers of the day. You may even share a ferry over to the island with a horse or two.

Fishtown

The annual “Here comes the Sun” party has been rocking historic Fishtown every Memorial Day Monday for 30 years. This year, The Cove restaurant is bringing back the long-time traditions: live band, outdoor barbecue, and a rowboat icing down the beer as it floats on the Leland River.

Benzie County

Nothing says season opener of summer like Honor’s chance to catch the family-friendly double feature at The Cherry Bowl Drive-in. Pre-movie, make time for onsite mini golf and taking in the cartoons that feature dancing hot dogs. Don’t forget to grab a box of popcorn topped with real butter.

Ludington

The entire town lines the streets of Ludington when the SS Badger (獾) sets sail for the season on May 12. Even first-time sailors on this four-hour Lake Michigan ferry will find it hard to resist joining the quiz (with prizes!), or catching an on-board movie. Look for themed shoreline sails, too, that travel along Ludington’s coast with live entertainment.

21. Where should you go if you want to experience a military training?

- A. Fort Mackinac. B. Fishtown. C. Benzie County. D. Ludington.

22. What can people do in Benzie County?

- A. Watch a cannon firing. B. Taste delicious hot dogs.
C. Enjoy a film with family. D. Take part in a quiz game.

23. What do Fort Mackinac and Ludington have in common?

- A. They provide boat rides. B. They enjoy a long history.
C. They host live performances. D. They hold animal-themed activities.

B

As a mother and a professional working full time, I spent all of my 30s saying yes. Saying yes to things I wanted to do, but a lot of the time saying yes to things I disliked. This was a people-pleasing technique that would affect people’s opinion of me: the woman who could do it all, so that I can obtain a nice fame in their mind.

Little did I know that I was also developing an autoimmune(自身免疫的) disease, which I have to believe was my body’s way of telling me to slow down. I had severely swollen joints and brain fog but I pushed through so that I could look in the mirror at the end of the day and feel “accomplished.” The only things I was accomplishing were bad health and bad habits.

And then a series of events changed everything: serious medical issues and losing my job. It took all that to help me see how intensely burnt out I was. I spent a lot of time thinking about where I had to be next instead of being present in the moment. But now, I wake up each day knowing that everything on my schedule has been purposefully agreed to.

Looking back, I had the capability to suffer the pressure to say yes. I also felt it necessary to say yes, from driving people to the airport to seeing family every Friday night. I always wanted to solve everyone’s problems and offered sound and immediate solutions. It was one big “yes” to everything.

I was everyone’s cheerleader, but forgot how to cheer for myself along the way. But saying no is being my own cheerleader. And it’s not saying no to caring for family and friends. Instead, it’s a minor change in mindset, taking a pause before automatically agreeing. I take a breath, do a quick count of my energy and ability before jumping in.

24. Why did the author say yes to things she disliked?
- A. To please her boss. B. To prove her profession.
C. To push herself to the limit. D. To earn herself a good reputation.
25. How did the author deal with the changes in her body?
- A. She got rid of bad habits. B. She thought little of them.
C. She slowed down her life pace. D. She paid more attention to her health.
26. Which word can best describe the author?
- A. Purposeful. B. Stubborn. C. Reflective. D. Encouraging.
27. What will the author do before saying yes?
- A. Find a cheerleader. B. Evaluate her situation.
C. Breathe in some fresh air. D. Seek help from her friends.

Lots of young mammals and birds engage in behaviour that provides no obvious adaptive outcome such as access to food, shelter or a mate, is voluntary and rewarding in itself and appears to be conducted pleasantly when the animal is relaxed.

What about bumblebees(大黄蜂)? Apparently they play too, according to work just published in Animal Behaviour by Galpayage Dona and Lars Chittka. The idea of asking whether bumblebees like to play came to Chittka during a previous study in which he trained them to roll wooden balls around in order to gain access to food. He noticed that, during this experiment, they would often roll the balls for no apparent reason. They just seemed to enjoy it.

A perfect PhD project for an ambitious student. And Ms Galpayage Dona stepped up to the mark. She created an field, put pollen (花粉) and sugar solution in it to arrest the bees, and connected it via a plastic tube to a bumblebee nest in Dr Chittka's laboratory. In one part of the field, nine of the balls were fixed to the floor. In another, the balls could be rolled around. Ms Dona tagged 45 bees, between one and 23 days old, so that they could be followed as individuals. She then opened the door to the field for three hours a day for 18 days and recorded on video what happened.

The recordings suggested that the bees did enjoy this experiment. All of the tagged bees rolled a ball at least once during the experiment. Most did so many times. One particular enthusiast managed 117 rolls. Overall, the camera recorded 910 incidents of ball-rolling by tagged insects. Also young bees played more often than old ones. All that they seemingly need now is some goalposts and a referee (裁判), and bumblebee social behaviour will take off to the next level.

28. Why do some animals engage in the behavior mentioned in paragraph 1?
- A. To find a perfect mate. B. To gain access to food.
C. To entertain themselves. D. To get rewards from others.
29. What gave rise to the study published in Animal Behaviour?
- A. A survival training. B. A failed experiment.
C. An ambitious project. D. An unexpected finding.
30. What does the underlined phrase "stepped up to the mark" mean in paragraph 3?
- A. Applied for her PhD. B. Joined Chittka's study.
C. Tagged the bumblebees. D. Updated Chittka's equipment.
31. What can be a suitable title of the passage?
- A. Why Animals Love to Play? B. How Bumblebees Manage Ball-rolling?
C. Are Bumblebees Potential Football Players? D. Is Playfulness Restricted to Mammals and Birds

Dartford Grammar, a secondary school in Kent, declines to enter their graduates for A-levels. Instead, pupils follow courses set by International Baccalaureate, an exam board based in Switzerland. They study six subjects, and these must include maths, English and a foreign language. "We're not just preparing students for university," says Julian Metcalf, the headmaster, "but for another 60 years of life beyond that."

Every few years England's A-level system comes in for a kicking. Britain's prime minister is the latest person who warned that England was unusual in letting youngsters drop maths and their native language at 16. He proposed switching the current system for a new "British Baccalaureate" that would require pupils to keep up both of those subjects until they are 18.

Even critics agree that A-levels are demanding qualifications, and that they enjoy great reputation abroad. Britain's universities have traditionally been pickier than those in many other countries. Ambitious students have generally been grateful that they are allowed to sweat only the subjects they need for admission.

Yet A-levels may not be handing English teenagers the breadth (广度) of skills they need. Their performance in English and math tests falls behind other countries after they turn 16. One-third of 16-to 19-year-olds in England have low basic skills according to a survey.

There is enough time in the school day to offer extra maths and English classes without greatly affecting other studies. But it would cost money. Without any apparent justification, England's schools get less funding for pupils aged 16-19 than they do for younger children. Broadening studies would also require more staff. However, the number of people who began training to be a secondary-school teacher this September was about one-third lower than hoped.

32. What drove Dartford to make the decision in the first paragraph?

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| A. A-levels' various courses. | B. Pupils' heavy study burden. |
| C. Prime minister's latest proposal. | D. Students' long-term development. |

33. What do we know about students who take A-levels in England?

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---------------------------------------|
| A. They prefer foreign languages. | B. They have to study six subjects. |
| C. They can choose to drop maths. | D. They are picky about universities. |

34. What might be a disadvantage of A-levels?

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| A. Strict admission rules. | B. Insufficient skill training. |
| C. Low international recognition. | D. Demanding subject requirements. |

35. What might be a major problem in England's education system?

- | | |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| A. Overpaid staff. | B. Long school-time. |
| C. Unqualified teachers. | D. Imbalanced investment. |

第二节 (共5小题;每小题2分,满分10分)

根据短文内容,从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

As bad as it feels, anxiety is essential. It's awful, but imagine not having it? Imagine the state of our lives and relationships if we don't have that little feeling inside us going, "Ah, don't go there. Don't do that." 36. But when anxiety hits, it's hard to remember its importance. Here are some interventions to help dial down your stress for those moments.

Name things that make you feel safe

If you're feeling anxious, ask yourself, "What are some things that help me feel safer?" 37. A lot of people will find that being surrounded by familiar people or things is comforting. Once you have your list of people or activities that make you feel safe, pick one off the list and do it.

38

Try naming five things you can hear, taste, touch, smell or feel. You can also try washing your face with cold water. Smelling something strong can help too. These strategies help activate the parasympathetic nervous system (副交感神经系统), which can allow the body to relax. 39.

Acknowledge your physical sensations

Naming how you feel physically when anxious can help dial down the intensity. For example, let's say you feel anxiety in your stomach. 40. Then, pick a part of your body that is not in active pain. Next, alternate attention between the place in your body where you feel pain and the place where you do not feel pain. This mindfulness technique can help you tolerate or even reduce your pain.

- A. Use your senses to relieve yourself
- B. Describe your pain to your physician
- C. Notice you feel like it's on fire and it's tight
- D. Thus, your physical sufferings will be greatly relieved
- E. Anxiety is how our body can signal to us when we're in danger
- F. That way, the part of your brain responsible for logic can come back online
- G. It could be a person you feel comfortable around or a TV show you love rewatching

第二节 (共 10 题; 每小题 1.5 分, 满分 15 分)

阅读下面材料, 在空白处填入适当的内容(1 个单词)或括号内单词的正确形式。

China's first group of five female pilots flying J-11B fighter jets(战斗机) successfully completed their first training recently.

The five female pilots involved are at 56 average age of 23. Following their first flight in the J-11B, they 57 (receive) training on formation flying, low-altitude and air combat (作战) training before they finally participate into front—line combat units next year. The five pilots have completed the high-overload and high—intensity flight training in the J-11B aircraft, with intensity of the training 58 (be) the same as that of the men.

"We are honored to be part of the first group of female pilots flying J-11B fighter jets but 59 was also a test for us. Though we're weak in physical strengths 60 (compare) with men, flying these jets is not 61 how strong you are. 62 matters most is decision-making and control of the jets. With the 63 (strong) tolerance, women would be better adapting for long—hour fighting," noted Yan Zhongyue, one of the five female pilots.

Women obviously enjoy advantages in operating weapons and advanced equipment because of the careful and sensitive characteristics, which also suits future warfare in which 64 (accuracy) operation of weapon platforms would be one of 65 (focus).

1. 推荐展品;
2. 陈述原因;
3. 表达期待。

注意:

1. 写作词数应为 80 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

Dear Eric,

Yours sincerely,
Li Hua

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Captain America had always been a hero for Timothy White during his childhood. White dressed up as Captain America for conventions, parades and the local Anti-violence Superhero Day. As a teenager, he once knocked fiercely in the door of a house that was on fire to see if anyone was trapped inside. Fortunately, the house was empty.

However, things were quite different this time. If Timothy White Jr. were Captain America, perhaps one throw of the superhero's trademark shield(盾牌) could have saved the day. But this was real life. When he spotted trouble on this September afternoon he wasn't wearing his costume and couldn't fall back on any superpowers.

It was rush hour in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. White, 38, was driving home from the non-profit he and his mother run called AMiracle4Sure, which helped formerly imprisoned individuals readapt to society. To get some fresh air from the long drive, he kept his window down on this autumn day. Suddenly, he noticed a gray four-door pickup on the opposite side of the street. The truck was going 10 to 15 mph. It was hard to miss, since it was circling and tilting(倾斜) into the road before course-correcting, only to tilt into the road again.

"What an annoying driver!" White murmured. But as the truck drew closer, White took a glance at it. This time he got a good look at the problem: The driver appeared to be asleep! Worse still, they were coming up to a busy street. Pretty soon, this guy's going to crash into a house and kill himself or somebody else, White thought.

While many people would have kept on driving, that's not how White did—his girlfriend refers to him as Captain Harrisburg because of his permanent willingness to help people out. He had to stop that vehicle before anything terrible happened.

注意: 来源: 高三答案公众号

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;

2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

White made a U-turn and was now facing in the same direction as the truck.

An ambulance soon arrived and took the driver to a hospital.
