It's well known that Chinese people attach great importance to labor, for it not only creates a better environment for us to live in but also advocates the spirit of diligence. As for me, there are various kinds of labour tasks to do, such as helping clean the house, washing dishes after dinner and sweeping floor. Doing all these chores helps me learn to be more independent and responsible, thus making me feel a sense of achievement.

But his glasses came off when he fell in the water. A frown stood up as he silently took off his wet clothes. Joel made an attempt to search for the lost glasses, but undoubtedly failed. While Harry applied medicine to Father's wound, he noticed his father make the bandage a mess due to the loss of glasses. An uncontrollable sense of fear surged through him that without glasses, Father probably couldn't lead them back home. "If only Joel hadn't thrown a stick at me!" Harry mumbled. "I swear that's not true!" Joel screamed. They appeared on the verge of losing their temper.

"Just calm down," Mr. Taylor shouted, "without my glasses, we need to work together to find our way." The two boys were totally at a loss at first. Taking a deep breath, Mr. Taylor patiently instructed them to recognize marks on the compass and the map. He also encouraged the two boys to cooperate and apply what they had learnt before to deal with the situation. What happened next was pure magic—Joel managed to use the compass as he related it to what he had read from books before. And Harry found himself capable of identifying their direction and which way to follow just as he had learnt in the club. The two boys ceased fire and joint hands, which made their father happy and satisfied. Spotting the way home, they hugged tightly, realizing that only cooperation and mutual understanding can overcome difficulties.

But his glasses came off when he fell in the water. Panic started to set in. How would he be able to navigate through the wilderness without his glasses? He had always relied on them to read maps and to see clearly in the distance. A frown stood up as he silently took off his wet clothes. The two boys were at a loss as well. Joel made an attempt to search for the lost glasses, but undoubtedly failed. At the same time, Harry applied medicine to Father's wound with the bandage prepared beforehand. An uncontrollable sense of fear surged through them three that they would get lost. "If only Joel hadn't thrown a stick at me!" Harry mumbled. "I swear that's not true!" Joel screamed. They were both on the verge of losing their temper.

"Just calm down," Mr. Taylor shouted, "without my glasses, we need to work together to find our way." Harry and Joel exchanged a look. They had never seen their father being so furious. But they also knew that they had to step up and help him in any way they could. "Let me see the map, Dad," Harry said, taking the plastic-wrapped paper from his father's backpack. Joel took out the compass and tried to orientate the map. While Under Father's guidance, they examined the twists and turns of the hiking trail. It was hard work, but the three of them managed to figure out their location and the direction they needed to go. After a few wrong turns and some backtracking, they finally made it back to their starting point. Exhausted, they were also proud of themselves for working together to overcome the obstacle. As they packed up to leave, Mr. Taylor turned to his sons and smiled. "It wasn't the hike I had imagined, but it was definitely an unforgettable experience. And it's all thanks to you two."
