Dear Hans,

I am Li Hua, a student of your class. Since I have some trouble in learning English grammar, I'm writing to ask you to give me some help

To begin with, I am very interested in the English humor you mentioned in class, from which I've learned a lot of knowledge. But because I'm lack of knowing English culture, sometimes I find it hard to figure out how funny an English humor can be. What's more, I am having some trouble in studying English grammar, for example I can't distinguish the differences between the past tense and the present perfect tense. So I really hope I can consult you face to face. When will it be convenient for me to visit you?

I would appreciate it if you could give me a hand, looking forward to your reply.

Yours

Li Hua

As Hamed looked closely through a window, his eyes widened in surprise. In the middle of the living room, Mohi was playing the violin. His eyes were half-closed in concentration as he was drawing the bow over the strings skillfully. He was so devoted to playing that he didn't notice someone had come in. How unbelievable! Hamed said to himself. Then an idea hit Hamed. It was the tradition of the school to have a concert on the Teachers' Day. Every class had to contribute an item. It was a good chance for Mohi to show his talent and be accepted by his classmates. Thinking of that, Hamed left quietly.

When the Teachers' Day came around, Hamed convinced the class to let Mohi perform. Curious and expecting, the class agreed. On the day of the concert, both the teachers and students were surprised to see the school's clumsiest student walking on stage with a violin. When he started to play, the audience fell silent. Jaws dropped. As the last note ended, there was a moment of silence. Then the audience erupted into thunderous applause. Well done, Mohi! Everybody praised. Mohi became a sensation and had many fans in his final year of school. Mohi and Hamed became the best of friends eventually.
