Todd Bol, a retired businessman, could never have expected that a wooden container he built in his front yard one day would have the global impact it does today.

Bol built a dollhouse-size structure that looked like a schoolhouse on a post and he put it in his yard as a free community library to remember his mother, who was a book lover and school teacher. Bol's prototype gave birth to Little Free Library (LFL), a nonprofit organization that seeks to place small, accessible book exchange boxes in neighborhoods around the world. The concept is simple: Neighbors are invited to share a book, leave a book, or both. Today, there are over 50,000 of these libraries registered in 70 countries.

Almost everyone can register with LFL and start a library as long as the person keeps it in good shape and makes sure that book materials are appropriate for his or her neighborhood. Library owners can create their own library boxes; therefore, the libraries are usually unique in appearance, and there seems to be no limit to the possibilities. One library in California was built out of a used wine container; another in Texas had tiny stairs and bright colored walls. Once registered, libraries are given a number at LFL's website. The LFL Index lists the locations of all libraries with GPS coordinates (坐标) and other information. Owners receive a sign saying "Little Free Library".

People say they have been attracted to pick up a book when walking by a Little Free Library, out of curiosity and because it's convenient. Some library owners say they have met more neighbors since having a little library in their front yard. Bol is also most proud of the way Little Free Library is bringing communities together. "It's started a neighborhood exchange. It gets people talking and more comfortable with their neighbors," he says. "This leads to them helping each other."

24. What does the underlined word "prototype" in Paragraph 2 refer to?

- A. A community center.
- B. A dollhouse on a post.

C. A book exchange box.

D. A nonprofit organization.

25. What can we learn about the operation of a Little Free Library?

A. There is no limit to the selection of books.

B. Professional librarians should be employed.

C. The library can come in any shape and color.

D. A number will be given to the owner before registration.

26. What can be inferred about Little Free Library?

A. It helps improve GPS functions.

B. It helps restore human connections.

C. It connects libraries around the world.

D. It makes reading accessible to the poor.

27. Which of the following can be the best title for the text?

A. LFL:A Booster to Shared Reading

B. LFL: The Best Place to Meet Neighbors

C. Todd Bol:A Successful Book Businessman

D. Reading:An Approach to Improving Yourself

C

Globally, around 14 percent of food produced is lost between harvest and retail (零售). Farmers throw away a significant share of their crop due to factors beyond their control, such as produce not meeting supermarket standards for shape or size, unexpected weather patterns changing harvest times and yield as well as a shortage of pickers. These factors and others leave farmers with extra crops on their hands.

Gleaning--collecting leftover crops from farmers' fields after they haven't been harvested or commercial use--may contribute to tackling the problem. In Britain, a growing network of volunteer gleaning groups are being welcomed into farmers' fields to collect tonnes of free produce. The produce would then be given to local food banks, which would otherwise be left to rot after the commercial harvest.

The charity Feedback told The Times that its number of gleaning groups across England had risen from five in 2017 to twenty last year. Feedback's overall aim is for closer links between farmers and the communities they feed.

Holly Whitelaw, 52, from St Just in Penwith, set up the Cornwall Gleaning Network last year after watching a BBC series that highlighted food poverty in Cornwall. She contacted Feedback which gave her a £2,000 grant (拨款) to get insurance, knives, and cut-proof gloves. She set up a Facebook page, found willing volunteers and then managed to get a £10,000 grant from Feeding Britain, a national network of anti-hunger partnerships, to establish seven coordinators across the county and pay for more knives and gloves. They also raised funds to buy a pick-up truck. As a thank you to the farmers, they have begun planting trees to reduce wind speed across their land, preventing damage to crops and minimizing soil erosion.

Gleaning offers an opportunity for environmental win by reducing food waste on the farm. Also, it has a social benefit, as the collected fresh food can be donated to charity organizations and food banks to support those in need.

28. According to the passage, which of the following has little impact on crop waste?

- A. Produce in poor quality.
- B. Lack of labor on the farm.
- C. Increasing supermarket orders.
- D. Changeable weather conditions.

29. What might help Whitelaw generate the idea of gleaning?

- A. A grant from the charity Feedback.
- B. Feedback's overall aim for closer links.
- C. Communities and volunteers' joint effort.
- D. A TV series revealing regional food poverty.

30. What can we learn about the practice of gleaning from the passage?

- A. It proves rewarding.
- B. It needs to be more creative.
- C. It is physically challenging.
- D. It takes ages to see the result.

31. What is the author's purpose in writing the passage?

- A. To set a new standard for farming.
- B. To explain the reasons for overproduction.
- C. To gather the information about produce in Britain.
- D. To introduce a solution to the problem of food waste.

D

Research into social robots has shown that machines that are at the cutting edge of interaction can respond to feelings and emotionally care for the weak, the elderly and children.

Robin was designed as a companion robot to provide emotional support for children receiving medical treatment. Robin explains medical procedures to them, plays games and tells stories, and during treatment distracts them to reduce their sense of pain. The robot uses AI to understand other people's feelings, remembering facial expressions and conversations to build dialogue for follow-up sessions. In trials at the Wigmore Medical (UK) Pediatric Clinic in Yerevan, Armenia, the team found that Robin led to a 34% decrease in stress and an increase in happiness of 26% in the 120 children who interacted with him at least once.

Healthcare robots could all benefit from displaying emotional intelligence, both recognizing and responding to human emotions, and to some extent, managing them. The problem with this is the fear that human jobs may be lost as robots become better at handling social situations.

Population trends suggest that the demand for robots to work alongside people in care situations will grow over time. By 2050, the number of people aged 65 and over globally will be 1.6 billion (17%), roughly twice the proportion of what it is today. An extra 3.5 million care workers will be needed and that will include emotionally intelligent robots.

Today's simple systems are being trained to meet that demand. This includes a little wheeled robot that can guess how you are feeling from the way you walk, and the robot from the University of Lincoln in the UK-who helps elderly people to stay physically and mentally active.

The impact of social robots on our lives to date has been tiny. But new models are being introduced that could make the breakthrough. Human emotions are difficult to define, but as trust in robots increases, breaking down the psychological barrier becomes easier to imagine.

32. What are social robots uniquely capable of?

- A. Playing songs for blind people on their request.
- B. Comforting mentally ill teens during treatment.

- C. Lifting heavy packages upstairs for weak people.
- D. Cooking delicious dishes for the disabled at home.

33. What aspect about Robin is mainly talked about in Paragraph 2?

- A. Robin's practical application.
- B. Robin's success in passing tests.
- C. Robin's popularity in hospitals.
- D. Robin's function to cure diseases.

34. How is Paragraph 4 developed?

- A. By giving definition.
- B. By making comparison.
- C. By analyzing causes.
- D. By concluding viewpoints.

35. As for the application of social robots, which of the following will the author agree with?

- A. It is already happening throughout UK.
- B. It is an unstoppable and beneficial trend.
- C. Humans need to work hard to secure jobs.
- D. Social Robots can only meet basic human needs.

第二节（共5小题；每小题2.5分，满分12.5分）

根据短文内容，从短文后的选项选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Happiness is work in progress but everyone's process is different. Many people blame their own unhappiness on uncontrollable circumstances, situations or other people. _36

No one can take away your happiness without your permission. Here are a few things that any of us can start doing to feel more happiness in our lives.

Find flow experiences

37 Being involved in a task or activity, where nothing else seems to matter, is a state of being called Flow. From hiking to gardening, reading or even watching a TV show, flow basically describes the inherent sense of satisfaction. When your brain builds expectations about what will make you happy, it begins to adjust itself to seek more happy habits.

Express gratitude

People who are grateful feel better about themselves and they also show higher levels of happiness. 38

Every day presents an opportunity to try something that can make you grateful.

Develop meaningful relationships

Good social relationships are the most consistent predictor of a happy life. Satisfying relationships not only make people happy, but they are also associated with better health and even longer life. Besides, they are connected to some of our strongest emotions.

39_When relationships bring out the worst in us or they are non-existent, we feel anxious, depressed, and lonely.

Live in the moment

It's extremely hard to be happy when you spend most of your time worrying about the past or living in fear of the future. Life is unfolding, but we are too occupied to notice. The simple things are the most extraordinary things that sometimes make life easy to manage. 40

- A. So, enjoy the little joys in life when you find them.
- B. Practicing it can also help make changes in our brains.
- C. But the truth is that our happiness is our own responsibility.
- D. It is a state of active, open, intentional attention on the present.
- E. Gratitude can also help us feel more connected to the world around us.
- F. When relationships are positive we feel happiness, contentment, and calm.
- G. Have you ever lost yourself in something so much that you lost track of time?

第二节 (满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Three months later was the Middle School Championship Baseball Game of the spring season ! The winners would all get trophies (奖杯) , Jonas was determined to bring home a trophy to put on his shelf for he had never won one before.

He insisted on practicing in the stadium with friends every day. Day in and day out, the gloves became worn-out. Jonas thought, " I want a pair of new baseball gloves for better practice! "

Jonas passed by a store and saw a pair of delicate gloves, which cost thirty-five dollars. But when Jonas asked for the new baseball gloves, his mother only sighed. " Your birthday isn't until July, " she said. " If you want the gloves sooner than that, you will have to buy it yourself. If you want something, earn it by yourself. "

Jonas thought hard. He was too young to drive to work like Dad, and he couldn't turn his bedroom into an office to work at home like Mom. He went to his favorite thinking spot to look at the bird feeder in his back yard.

As Jonas was thinking about getting a job, it began to snow. At first there were only a few flakes (雪花), but soon the ground turned white.

“I know!” cried Jonas. “I’ll shovel (铲) the sidewalks on snow days. If I’m fast, I can do a lot of houses and make a lot of money.”

So Jonas put on his warmest sweater and fastened the button of his winter coat. He also added scarf, gloves and a hat. Then he went into the garage to grab a shovel.

Jonas started next door. He rang the bell and asked Mr. Travers if he would like his sidewalks shoveled. “Yes,” said Mr. Travers. “But you should wait until it stops snowing before you start or you will have to do it twice.”

“I’ll be back!” said Jonas. He went around the block to see who would like their walks shoveled after the storm. He had eight customers by the time he got back to his own house.

注意:

(1) 所续写短文的词数应为 150 左右;

(2) 请按如下格式作答。

When it stopped snowing, Jonas grabbed his shovel and got to work.

Tired but happy, Jonas looked at the forty dollars earned from his work.
