nation's practices and differences from the American way of doing business and politics.

"China is a power coming up, so they might challenge us," Paul Amon, a junior from Oil City High School, said. "I'd hope that China can be our partner but I think that we'd clash along the way because we're too different," he added.

"China is just this big question mark. China was just a big country with millions of people that no one really knew about because it was so far away and our class was more American history based," she said.

Set in the snow-covered Himalayan mountains, Nainital's waterways and forests are popular places for tourists. The road to Nainital is covered with woodlands that elephants, snakes, and squirrels always use as well. Nainital's wildlife and human visitors exist together in the same place, but increasing tourist traffic causes a danger to some of these animals while they cross the roads. Then on the way to Nainital, an eco-bridge appears on a busy highway.

A forest manager said, "This is a rich forest, and elephant, leopards, deer and bulls move in this area. Drivers can see these large animals from some distance and slow down or stop, but they seldom do so for animals like snakes, lizards and squirrels." To make things safer for these smaller animals, an eco-bridge was built.

No iron was found in the building of the 90-foot-long bridge. It was only made from materials like bamboo and grass and high up in the air above the road. Workers are now growing grass and plants to cover the bridge in order to attract animals. It is hoped that a green bridge will draw animals to use it. Meanwhile, it is always attracting tourists, who stop to take photos of the amazing bridge. It will make drivers realize how dangerous their high driving speed will be to animals and then reduce their speed.

Although the eco-bridge is the first Indian wildlife bridge for small animals, Indian people have recently worked on a number of projects to help cars and larger animals share the road. For example, six bridges were built over a highway in the Annamalai Hills. These bridges were built to support monkeys in reaching both sides of the highway. On India's busy National Highway 44, several bridges have successfully enabled large wild animals to cross the crowded highway. Plans for more animal crossings are already carried out in India, including one for elephants on the Chen-nai-Bangalore National Highway.

India has some of the most unique wildlife in the world. Hopefully, nature-based city planning will benefit both India's native wildlife and its human neighbors.

32. Why was an eco-bridge designed on the way to Nainital?
 A. To attract more tourists to go there. B. To keep small animals safe.
 C. To protect some rare animals. D. To prevent wild animals hurting people.
33. What is special about the eco-bridge?
 A. It is cost-effective to build. B. It is the first bridge in India.
 C. It can improve visitor's safety. D. It draws on the natural materials.
34. What is expected of the drivers after the building of the bridge?
 A. Avoiding taking photos of animals when they are passing by.
 B. Using the new bridge only if it is necessary.
 C. Visiting Nainital's forests as little as possible.
 D. Improving their awareness of slowing down for wild animals.
35. What is the main idea of para 4?
 A. Indians' effort in building wildlife-friendly highway systems.
 B. The difficulties of building animal crossing in big cities.
 C. Why most highways in India are safe for wild animals.
 D. How animal crossing influence wildlife and humans.

第二节(共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

Most of us look forward to weekend as a time to relax and connect with friends and family. But as the weekend comes to an end, many of us are instead experiencing a looming sense of anxiety and even fear the upcoming week. 36. Polls say 75% to 80% of people experience these Sunday scaries. Even though the Sunday scaries are common, they are manageable.

Don't forget to relax.

When structuring your Sunday, try not to cram in too many chores. If you're feeling more stress in general, it's important to make space for relaxing activities to ground (使平静) yourself. And there's no right way to relax. Maybe a body scan meditation. Maybe a mid-afternoon shower or bath. Maybe an engaging movie or show. 37.

38.

Try to figure out what's really causing you to fear the week. Is it a deadline, meeting or presentation? Even if there's not a single reason behind your Sunday anxiety, organizing the stress you expect from the week ahead into bite-sized chunks can help make it all more manageable.

Create multiple to-do lists.

39. Therefore, you might as well have more than one lists. One for tasks that need to be completed immediately, another for tasks that are less urgent, and a final list for tasks that you'd like to complete at some point. Seeing these can help put into perspective what's important and what you can let go of for now.

Create some excitement for the week ahead.

Having something to look forward to gives you something to think about that's pleasing, rather than only focusing on the fear you feel. 40. Instead of focusing on the awful things you expect from the week, build excitement over a lunch date with a friend you've been meaning to catch up with.

- A. Identify your anxiety sources
- B. Don't be afraid of what will happen
- C. It's a form of reshaping your thoughts
- D. Experts have given this worry the name "Sunday scaries"
- E. Sometimes you have to deal with several tasks meanwhile
- F. This is an opportunity to give yourself proper time to relax
- G. Whatever feels like a helpful distraction to step out of the scaries

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两端,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

"I wish we hadn't come on this trip!" Jeff's voice echoed across the narrow canyon(峡谷). His father stopped, breathing heavily. "This is hard on you, but you've got to come through with courage!" He gently placed his hand on the boy's shoulder. "Now, I don't know if I can make it without stopping every so often. You're young, but you're strong and fast. Do you remember the way back from here to the road, if you had to go alone?"

Jeff flashed back to the painful scene of Mark, his seventeen-year-old brother at their campsite. His leg was bitten by a snake yesterday and they did first aid with the wound so that it wouldn't get so serious before they returned home. But this morning Mark couldn't move, and the pain got worse. He needed medical attention right away otherwise he might lose his life. The only way is to get the rescue helicopter as soon as possible. They had left their phone in the car, which was stopped out of the canyon and it must have been out of power by then. Leaving Mark at the campsite and seeking help was their only choice.

"Jeff, could you do it?"

Jeff looked to the end of the canyon, several miles away. He nodded and a plan began to take hold in his mind. "What is the name of that little town we stopped, Dad?" There must be a hospital there.

"Flint. We parked at the side of the road a few miles out of Flint."

Jeff nodded. Then they continued climbing. Stone by stone, they made their way up the canyon. Gradually, Jeff's father grew smaller and smaller in the distance. Jeff waved to him and then climbed toward the road. Two hours later, he finally reached the road and struggled toward the town, almost exhausted.

"Can't stop," he thought. "Mark's in big trouble. Keep going." Suddenly, he saw a truck heading toward him. "Hey, mister!" he shouted, waving both arms. He began to jog toward the truck, and then broke into a full-speed run.
