Mary had struggled to find the right words to convey her thoughts and feelings ever since she was a child. She was often told that she was “too quiet” or “too shy”, and as she grew older, she became increasingly self-conscious about her inability to articulate herself. It wasn't that she didn't have anything to say—far from it. Mary's mind was constantly racing with ideas and observations, but no matter how hard she tried, she just couldn't seem to get the words out.

“Mary, I need to talk to you,” Mr. Thompson, the boss of Mary's new company, said one day, his voice serious. Mary's heart sank. “Don't worry,” Mr. Thompson said, noticing Mary's panic. “It's not that kind of conversation. I just wanted to talk to you about something that's been on my mind lately.”

He paused for a moment, collecting his thoughts. “I've noticed that you've been struggling a bit lately. It seems like you're having a tough time communicating with customers. I hear that you're proficient at writing. So why not join our Advertising Department? Besides, I have another suggestion. . .”

Mary kept nodding, unable to find the words to express her gratitude.

Following Mr. Thompson's suggestion, Mary joined a writing competition. She had always been a talented writer, and she knew that she had the potential to create something truly special. So she set to work, pouring her heart and soul into her essay. The words started flowing, and Mary found herself writing with a newfound sense of clarity and purpose.

The judges of the competition were amazed by Mary's essay, and they selected it as the winner. Mary was thrilled, and she was grateful to have finally found the right way to do a good job.

27. What can best describe Mary's experience?

- A. Actions speak louder than words.

This is the digital age, and the advice to managers is clear. If you don't know what ChatGPT is or dislike the idea of working with a robot, enjoy your retirement. So, as for the present you should get for your manager this festive season, a good choice may be anything made of paper. Undoubtedly, it can serve as a useful reminder of where the digital world's limitations lie. Several recent studies highlighted the enduring value of this ancient technology in several different aspects.

A study by Vicky Morwitz of Columbia Business School, Yanliu Huang of Drexel University and Zhen Yang of California State University, Fullerton, finds that paper calendars produce different behaviours from digital calendars. Users of old-fashioned calendars made more detailed project plans than those looking at an App, and they were more likely to stick to those plans. Simple dimensions seem to count. The ability to see lots of days at once on a paper calendar matters.

漳州市 2023 届高三毕业班第三次质量检测英语试题 第 4 页 (共 8 页)

Here is another study from Maferima Touré-Tillery of the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University and Lili Wang of Zhejiang University. In one part of their study, the researchers asked strangers to take a survey. Half the respondents were given a pen and paper to fill out a form; the other half were handed an iPad. When asked for their email address to receive information, those who used paper were much likelier to decide on a positive answer. The researchers believe that people make better decisions on paper because it feels more consequential than a digital screen. Paper-and-pen respondents were more likely than iPad users to think their choices indicated their characters better.

Researchers had other findings. They found shoppers were willing to pay more for reading materials in printed form than those they could only download online. Even the sight of someone handling something can help online sales. Similarly, people browsing(浏览) in a virtual-reality(虚拟现实) shop was more willing to buy a T-shirt if they saw their own virtual hand touch it.

28. How does the author lead in the topic?

- A. By telling a story. B. By giving examples.
C. By raising questions. D. By describing a situation.

29. Why can paper calendars make users stick to plans better?

- A. They are a better reminder.
B. They can show more detailed plans.
C. They provide chances for people to practice writing.
D. They provide a better view of many days' plans at a time.

30. Which of the following did paper influence based on Paragraph 3?

- A. Decision. B. Sympathy.
C. Efficiency. D. Responsibility.

31. What can we infer from the last paragraph?

- A. Paper posters will greatly promote sales online.
B. E-magazines are thought less valuable than paper ones.
C. Seeing others buy will increase one's purchasing desire.
D. People prefer items made of paper instead of other materials.

D

This month, the Internet was flooded with wonderful digital art portraits, thanks to the work of the latest artificial intelligence-assisted application to go viral: Lensa. Users uploaded their photographs to the App and then—for a small fee—it used AI to transform their profile pictures into, say, a magical warrior princess version of themselves, in no time at all.

This year has seen a breakthrough for AI-driven image generators, which are now better than ever in quality, speed and affordability. If that sounds great to you, you might not be one of the millions of humans whose livelihoods depend on being able to exchange those skills for money.

Some artists predicted that a computer would recreate the aura of a masterpiece by Leonardo da Vinci in the near future. As long as there are enough data for the AI to train itself, it can copy numerous masterpieces just in several minutes. It seems unavoidable that a large number of artists would lose their jobs.

"I see it less as a threat and more of an opportunity," the UK-based illustrator Michelle Thompson said, adding, "Like everything else, there will always be artists who can use the tools better."

These tools are only as good as the data sets they are trained on. Human imagination, on the other hand, has no limit. For Dryhurst, an artist from Germany, AI models "could attempt to make a pale version of something we did years ago", but that "doesn't account for what we might do next".

The kind of artificial intelligence we might imagine replacing artists—an entirely autonomous creative robot—does not yet exist, but it is coming. And as AI becomes more universal, artists, illustrators and designers will ultimately be set apart not by if, but by how, they use the technology.

漳州市 2023 届高三毕业班第三次质量检测英语试题 第 5 页(共 8 页)

32. Why does the author mention Lensa in Paragraph 1?
A. To recommend the new App. B. To inform latest news.
C. To lead in the AI topic. D. To introduce its new function.
33. What is Michelle Thompson's attitude towards AI?
A. Concerned. B. Favorable. C. Unclear. D. Critical.
34. What might be a weakness of AI in creating art works?
A. Accuracy. B. Diversity.
C. Creativity. D. Efficiency.
35. Which can be the best title for the text?
A. Is AI coming into our daily life?
B. Can AI copy masterpieces of great artists?
C. Shall we welcome new AI technology?

The day when the jobs were handed out was one of the most exciting for all the children in the class. It took place during the first week of the term. On that day, every boy and girl was given a job for which they would be responsible for the rest of that school year.

As everything else, some jobs were more interesting, and the children were eager to be given one of the interesting ones. When giving them out, the teacher took into account which children had been most responsible during the previous year, and those children were usually the ones who most looked forward to this day. Among them Rita stood out. She was a kind and quiet girl; and during the previous year she had carried out the teacher's instructions perfectly. All the children knew Rita was the favourite to be given the best job of all—to look after the class dog.

But this year there was a big surprise. Each child received one of the normal jobs, like preparing the books or the radio for the lessons, telling the time, cleaning the blackboard, and looking after one of the pets. But Rita's job was very different. She was given a little box containing some sand and some ants. And even though the teacher insisted that they were very special ants, Rita couldn't help feeling disappointed. Anyway, she accepted the task. Most of her classmates felt sorry for her. They sympathised with her and remarked on how unfair it was that she had been given that job. Even Rita's father felt sorry for her, and as an act of protest, he told Rita to pay no attention to this insignificant pet. However, Rita, who liked her teacher very much, preferred to show the teacher her ability by doing something special with such an insignificant task. "I will turn this little task into something great," Rita said to herself.

注意:

- (1)续写词数应为 150 左右;
- (2)请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

To learn more about her little ants, Rita turned to Dr. Martinez, a famous entomologist (昆虫学家).

Several months later, one day, Dr. Martinez came to Rita's class to choose a young assistant.
