As Rendall and his friend Bourke were searching for holiday gifts, they came across a lion cub (幼兽) for sale in a store in London. They bought it and named it Christian. It was a lovely animal, full of character. They looked after Christian for about a year, during which time an amazing bond formed between the two men and the lion. The three of them shared a flat over a furniture shop on London's King's Road, where cute and intelligent Christian quickly became a local celebrity, cruising (开车兜风) the streets in the back of a Bentley, popping for lunch at a local restaurant, and even posing for a fashion advertisement.

But soon, Christian outgrew Rendall's flat and soon even the church garden where he went for exercise wasn't large enough for him. They realized that their pet needed to be among other lions and deserved to live free in his natural environment. With their friends' help, Rendall and Bourke took Christian to Kenya and placed it under the expert care of "the father of lions" George Adamson, where the two would introduce Christian to the wild. Rendall and Bourke spent several months with Christian, helping him adapt to the new living environment, and then left unwillingly. A year later, they went back to Kenya, hoping to find the lion. When they finally found Christian, incredibly, Christian walked over slowly. Then suddenly he recognized them! He ran over and jumped up on them. They received a loving welcome from their lion, who was fit in with Africa and a life with other lions in the wild.

Rendall and Bourke's extraordinary reunion with Christian was filmed and is subject of a wonderful documentary and a book. The film of their reunion was found on a Japanese blog and posted on YouTube accompanied by I will Always love You, sung by Whitney Houston. The clip of the reunion was recently placed on YouTube and has received over 45 million hits.

Digital hoarding (also known as e - hoarding or data hoarding) means accumulating a large amount of electronic materials, even though they are no longer valuable to the user.

Antoinette, 25, said, "Though not well - organized, the WhatsApp chat with my best friends in high school will never be deleted. It's interesting looking back so many years ago and who I was then, and I can see how the friendship and relationship have changed since then."

Besides the "friends" we keep on social media, digital files, folders, music, movies, computer programs are also forms of digital hoarding. Both undergraduates and graduates expressed feeling overwhelmed with the sheer volume of technological leftover data: lecture notes, PowerPoint slides, PDFs of research, snapshots of classroom whiteboards-not to mention their own ever - swelling Facebook friends they didn't know but were afraid of unfriending.

I am also a digital hoarder. My first home screen is filled with apps I use every day-Facebook, Spotify, Twitter, Outlook, Weather, etc. My second home screen has apps that I don't use quite as much, but still want within easy reach-billing apps, shopping, and smart home apps. My third home screen is where things get complex and out of control, just a mess of games, work and business - related apps, and a ton of diverse data that I keep telling myself I'll need for that one thing on that one day that has never come and probably never will.

Hoarders fall into different categories. "Collectors" are organized, systematic and in control of their data. "Accidental hoarders" are disorganized, don't know what they have, and don't have control over it. The "compliant hoarders" keeps data on behalf of their companies. Finally, "anxious hoarders" have strong emotional ties to their data and are worried about deleting it.

People are more resistant when it comes to actually getting rid of their precious possessions perhaps because they anthropomorphize them, treating lifeless objects as if they had thoughts and feelings.

第二节(共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

I started my love of laundry even before 3. I spent hours staring at the clothes circling in the washing machine. The love deepened as I grew older. I learned how to wash and dry before I was ten. 36 At the university, I sought out if I could wash my dry-clean-only myself.

What I learned from laundry were not just the how-tos. 37 When the clothes are clean, smell wonderful, and look great, your loved ones are going to feel as if their days are going to be all the brighter. That's true for you and your clothes as well. With the following basic rules, you'll be on your way.

RULE 1: Wash everything in warm water.

38 Yes, your darks. Yes, even your delicates. Don't worry-warm water will not fade (褪色) or shrink your clothes. Most wash cycles include four steps: the wash, the rest, the rinse (漂洗), and the spin. Only the wash stage uses warm water, meaning that your clothes will be in warm water for only eight or so minutes- just long enough to get them clean but never so long as to do them harm.

RULE 2: 39

One of my fondest childhood memories is keeping Granny company as she hung up laundry in the bright sunshine. It was my duty to hand her laundry pins (夹子). Late in the afternoon, we'd return to fold each piece and drop it into the basket. I remember her enjoying the process, and so did I.

You might not have time to hang up every load of your wash. But you may want to consider line-drying some of your things. It'll save energy and your clothes. 40

- A. I do mean everything.
- B. Sort your laundry wisely.
- C. Plus, they'll smell like sunshine.
- D. Offer a hand whenever necessary.

- E. Try to line dry, at least sometimes.
 F. In my teens, I taught myself to iron my uniforms.
 G. Caring for clothes is also a way to experience and express love.

He Delivered for Me

At first, I didn't know his name and didn't welcome his interruptions. Though I felt 41 by the unexpected knock on my window, I secretly named him Kris. Trapped in my apartment, I desired 44 and company. Far from fearing Kris's knock, I looked forward to his 45. He brought the stream of stuff I had 46 and would then stay for some face time. We discussed plenty of topics. I even learned his real first 47: Dave. I realized that he meant our five-minute conversations to be a 48 for me—and he was possibly doing the same for others, though he was 49 than ever.

One hot day in July, he told me that the company was changing his 50 of his service. My heart sank as we stood in our usual spots.

"I'm excited for a change," he said, "but I'm going to miss my 51."

"Congratulations." I didn't know what else to say.

He nodded, "I used to consider my job so 52 but gradually I realized that I was delivering people things they needed, things that brought them 53. Now I decide it is important."

I couldn't see his smile through his mask, but I could 54 it. "So wise you are," I said. "And so important."

At that, Dave finally pulled down his mask and flashed me a 55.

Kindness Is Precious

The sound of glass breaking is instantly recognizable. I'd been telling my best friend Missi a silly story and had spun(急转身) around in the living room when I heard that sound and froze.

When I looked down at the floor, it was full of tiny red, pink and clear glass pieces. Missi said fearfully, "Oh, no, not the vase."

"Why? What did I do?" My face reddened.

"Amy, that glass vase was one of the few items my grandparents had passed down to my mum through generations in my family," Missi replied nervously. "If you'd broken anything else in the apartment, I would have gladly said I did it. But you're going to have to tell my mom that it was your fault, and she's going to be really mad."

I was terrified. I'd destroyed a priceless vase. Why did I have to spin around like that?

We gathered up the broken pieces. I kept saying that maybe it could be fixed, but Missi said gently that it didn't look possible. I insisted we keep the pieces. But the glass was so delicate that some of it broke even more as we tried to sweep it up carefully.

Missi said her mom would be home at any time. I had got a few butterflies in my stomach. Would her mom criticise or punish me? Would she tell me I couldn't stay in their apartment for the weekend? I couldn't stop recalling those fifteen seconds in my mind, me spinning fast and the sound of glass crashing. The only thing I could think of to say was "I'm sorry."

A couple of minutes later we heard a key turn in the door. Her mom was home. Right from the start, we could see she was in a good mood. "Hello! It's hot today. I want to treat you girls to that frozen yogurt. Let's go!" her mom said, pointing at the open door.

注意:

(1)续写词数应为 150 左右;

(2)开头已给出。

"Before that, I need to tell you something really important," I said.

Her mom looked at me, saying nothing for what felt like forever.
