Dear John,

Learning that you are fascinated by the lecture to be held in our school, I'm dropping you a line to inform you of some detailed information.

The lecture, titled "Everlasting Splendor", will be launched at 2:30 pm on February 11 in our School Cultural Hall. Featuring China's intangible cultural heritage, the lecture will present relevant artworks, pictures, documents and audiovisual content. Typical intangible cultural heritage which is seen as the essence of Chinese cultural brilliance will be introduced to the audiences. At the end of the lecture, you will have a chance to experience the fantastic art of paper cutting, with the atmosphere enhanced by puppet shadow shows as well.

As is required, eating and drinking are not allowed during the lecture. And don't forget to take your notebook with you. Looking forward to seeing you in the lecture!

Yours,
Li Hua

第二节（满分 25 分）

"My little rat!" the idea occurred to the girl. She dropped the barrel right away and ran toward the kitchen, where she found her little friend dashing across the room in panic. Her aunt, with a stick in her hand, chased the rat around, cursing. "What a mess he made!" the fat woman roared. Her anger grew when she found out she could never catch the rat—she was too fat, and the rat was too quick. She looked around and saw nowhere the little rat.

The girl watched the neighbours gathering at the door and was frightened. Some neighbours
