vagueness, confusion or complete cheating. For instance, what do words such as “green”, “sustainable” and “eco” even mean? You have no standards, measurements or definitions to judge by.

These problems are increasingly important when it comes to the greenwashing of investment products, such as pensions and investment funds. In recent years, there has been a sharp rise in consumer demand for funds that invest according to environmental, social and governance criteria, often referred to as ESG funds. According to the financial data provider Morningstar, the value of assets (资产) held in UK funds grew from £29bn at the beginning of 2017 to £71bn by the end of 2020.

With that much money at risk for high profits, misleading claims can effectively hamper the flow of money and resources into really green new plans and businesses, preventing global efforts from dealing with the climate emergency. “I describe it as the ‘teenage years’ of responsible investing, with a lot of experimentation, and a lot of people trying out new things.” says Ashley Hamilton Claxton.

24. Which of the following can be called greenwashing?
- A. A product that is claimed to benefit the climate.
 - B. A product that can be washed in a green way.
 - C. A product that is absolutely environmentally friendly.
 - D. A product that is claimed to be green while not the case.
25. What’s the major cause of the problem of greenwashing?
- A. The product’s description is not clear.
 - B. The language isn’t grammatically right.
 - C. There are no such words as “sustainable”.
 - D. The company doesn’t say it’s “green” and “eco”.
26. What does the underlined word “hamper” probably mean?
- A. put
 - B. clarify
 - C. stop
 - D. divide
27. What can you infer from the last paragraph?
- A. Much money enables high profits.
 - B. Responsible investing is still at its early stage.
 - C. More money is invested in real green businesses.
 - D. A lot of people are unwilling to try out new things.

Harvesting drinking water from wet air around the clock? Now this technology is close to the theoretical ideal aim.

As real-world tests on the roof of an ETH building in Zurich revealed, the new technology can produce at least twice as much water per area per day as the best current passive technologies: the small experimental system with a pane (一格玻璃) diameter of 10 centimeters delivered 4.6 milliliters of water per day under real-world conditions. Larger devices with larger panes would generate more water as a result.

The researchers demonstrated that under ideal conditions, they could harvest up to 0.53 decilitres of water per square meter of pane surface per hour. “This is close to the theoretical maximum of 0.6 decilitres per hour, which is physically the greatest amount.” Iwan Hächler says. He is a doctoral student in Dimos Poulidakos’s (ETH Zurich) Thermodynamics Group.

Other technologies typically necessitate wiping condensed (冷凝的) water from a surface, which requires energy. Without this step, a large portion of the condensed water would hold on to the surface and become unusable, preventing further condensation. The ETH Zurich researchers coated the underside of the pane in their water condenser with a novel superhydrophobic (extremely water-resistant) coating. As a result, the condensed water beads up and runs or jumps off on its own. "Unlike other technologies, ours can truly function without any additional energy, which is a significant advantage," Hächler said.

The researchers' goal was to create a technology for water-stressed countries, particularly developing and emerging economies. They believe that now is the time for other scientists to further develop this technology or combine it with other methods, such as water desalination, to increase their yield. The coating of the panes is relatively simple, and larger water condensers than the current pilot system should be possible. Several water condensers could be positioned side by side to piece together a large-scale system, similar to how solar cells have several modules set up next to each other.

28. Why are the numbers used in Paragraph 2-3?
- A. To show the strengths of the present technology.
 - B. To explain the theory of a new water collecting device.
 - C. To demonstrate the great difficulty the researchers met.
 - D. To make vivid the close-to-ideal efficiency of the new technology.
29. What's the unique advantage of the new technology?
- A. It uses a device to wipe off condensed water.
 - B. It enables the water drops to run off by itself.
 - C. It consumes a very small amount of energy.
 - D. It has the upside of the pane specially coated.
30. What can we learn from the last paragraph?
- A. The new technology has been put into use.
 - B. Other scientists have been improving the device.
 - C. Developed countries are in great need of this device.
 - D. It may take some time to further develop the technology.

第二节 (共 5 小题; 每小题 2 分, 满分 10 分)

根据短文内容, 从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Chinese people may not be that familiar with sports tourism but it is one of the fastest growing sectors of tourism, because an increasing number of people are showing interest in sports activities during tours even if sports is not the main objective of their travel. 31.

Sports tourism refers to tourism involving participation in or watching sports events and staying in an environment different from the usual tourist hotels or resorts. 32. At that time, people traveled to Olympia to watch or take part in Olympic competitions. Modern sports tourism, on the other hand, started in the 1990s.

dramatic increase in the demand for sports tourism and the gradual but steady integration of sports and tourism.

Sports tourism is the fastest growing segment of the tourism industry today, with an annual growth rate of about 15 percent globally. 34.

Also, the integration of sports and tourism products will eventually lead to the integration of the sports and tourism markets to meet people's diversified consumption demand. Rural tourism, consists of fishing, hiking, horse riding and other outdoor activities. 35. This form of tourism, too, has been attracting many tourists.

In short, the rapid growth of sports tourism will help meet people's leisure needs and boost the high-quality development in China.

- A. It plays a vital role in rural construction.
- B. But sports tourism is still a new sector in China.
- C. However, this sector has long drawn people's attention in China.
- D. The origin of sports tourism can be traced back to Ancient Greece.
- E. In China, however, the growth rate is 30-40 percent despite a slow start.
- F. Marathons, cycling, hiking and camping fall in this part of sports tourism.

Radzi was the first out of the plane. He collected his luggage and quickly made his way to the arrival, hardly able to contain his excitement at meeting his family after six years abroad. He looked around expectantly, hoping to hear his voice being called out but he heard no sweet voices. He turned around and saw his parents, their dear faces shining with pride and pleasure but of his teenage twin sisters – none. There was no sign of them.

“They must be hiding somewhere – they love to play hide and seek.” His father smiled but said nothing. His mother kept on hugging him not allowing him to say anything. His father murmured, “Let’s get home. They’re waiting for us at home.” Radzi smiled, relieved to know they were at home. He kept on talking about how he toured Europe as Wani asked him to in her letter and he was rather puzzled whenever his parents exchanged glances.

Reaching home, he spied a lone figure at the door. “Why one? There should be two.” The twins were inseparable but it could be that six years had made all the difference. As that lone figure rushed towards him, he thought it was Wani but she said she was Wati. So it must be. He really could not differentiate between the two of them and they had fun deceiving him all the time. And they really had a lot of laughter over his mistaking one for the other.

“Where’s Wani?”

“In your bedroom.”

“Wani, Bang’s home.”

He walked into his room and read the words ‘Welcome Home, Dr. Radzi!’ He trusted his twin sisters to be so dramatic! He was studying medicine as a doctor and he had been focusing on his final examinations which needed much concentration. Wati invited him to go downstream to their favorite hideout. “Bang, I wish to be alone with you without Wani. Wani can wait her turn.”

第二节 读后续写 One possible version

In a quiet sad and serious tone, she related what had happened to Wani. A year ago, Wani fell seriously ill and was diagnosed with cancer. Everyone wanted to tell Radzi but Wani begged them not to as he was sitting for his finals and she did not want him to lose all concentration and be so upset. Everyone had to promise and even after his finals, she wrote him to tour Europe before coming home. She sent him photos of her with Wati, smiling, cheerful, and healthy. Radzi was stunned and asked in agony, “How could she? Why did you let her do it? Why? Why?” Wati kept silent. All she could do was to hug her brother, comforting him as he sobbed his heart out. When the tears dried up, Wati held out a letter. Radzi recognized the handwriting.

He took the letter and walked to the graveyard. Wati went with him, then left him to read the letter and to be alone in spirit with his beloved sister. “Bang, please don’t grieve. Remember me as the healthy, cheerful, fun-loving sister. Treasure our past moments and keep me always in your heart. Wati is with you. In her, you see me. I want to be a doctor like you. I can’t but you are one now. Be the best doctor I know. I am proud of you.” As he read her letter, a strange peace fell on him. It was as though she was beside him, comforting him and holding his hand. He looked around, saw Wati and she smiled. In Wati, he saw Wani. He walked up to Wati, took her hand. Together, the brother and sister walked home in the silence of the quiet evening.

M: It's nice meeting you. This is my wife Sandy and they are my children. This is my son, Mike, and my two daughters, Ann and Christina.

Text 4

W: So where did you travel this past summer?

M: The Crimea. My parents decided to travel there.

W: Did you have a good time there?

M: Well, it was the greatest mistake they had ever made.

Text 5

W: Do you like your teachers at your new school, Mark?

M: Yes. They're very welcoming and friendly. I've learned a lot in their classes. All of them are just amazing.

W: I'm glad to hear that.

Text 6

M: Hi, John. How's it going?

W: Terrible. I just found out I have a chemistry test tomorrow.

M: Your professor didn't tell you until now?

W: Actually, he told us — I just didn't hear it.

M: What are you going to do? Stay up all night?

W: I'll have to, because I also have an exam in French tomorrow.

Text 7

W: So why did you decide to start a GoFundMe campaign?

M: Well, last year many animal shelters came to me asking me to help their animals because I had found a good way to encourage people to adopt animals from an animal shelter. And many people had told my story on the Internet. So I decided to help more animals by starting the campaign to collect money for the shelters.

W: So how much money has your campaign raised?

M: $ 10,000. And I've already spent half of the money in helping animals.

W: How can people learn more about your work?

M: They can visit my Facebook, Instagram, or website.

W: Well, thank you for sparing some time for my newspaper. I cannot wait to share your story with our readers.

Text 8

M: Have a seat, Lisa. Now, what's the problem?

W: Well, as I told you on the phone, I'm having a bit of trouble with the owner of the flat, Mr. White. When I moved in six months ago, there was no cooker in the kitchen and the hot water system wasn't working properly. He agreed to have them fixed. But now still nothing has been done.

M: So he's broken his promise.

W: Yeah, and not only that. He wants to increase the money by $ 10 a week!

M: It is unbearable. Well, he can't do that without your agreement, you know.

W: Yes, but the trouble is he can ask me to move out if I don't agree.

M: Yes, that's true. He can. However, he can't just throw you out on the street. He has to give you a reasonable notice, usually a month in advance.

Text 9

M: What a busy week!

W: Really! I've never seen so much work.

M: Right. How are you going to spend your weekend?

W: I don't know. I have no idea.

M: Would you like to play some tennis with me before going home?

W: I'm afraid not. I'm not good at sports. I have never played tennis, and I know I would be terrible.

M: You should try it. It's a great game. Come on, let me help you. I'm a good player, and a good teacher, too. What do you say?

W: OK, but don't say I didn't warn you.

M: That was a pretty good shot, Mary.

W: Thanks. This is fun!

M: Let me help you with your serve. I think that with a little help you can be a good player.

W: No one has ever tried to show me how to play a sport before. Maybe I should learn to do something.

M: Of course, you can. All you need is a little help and a lot of practice.

W: Do you really think I can be a good player?

M: Well, maybe not a Michael Zhang, but better than the average. Would you like to play again Wednesday?

W: Yes. This has been fun.

Text 10

M: It's hard to avoid traveling over the holidays but I had never had a worse experience than the one I had last week.

I flew back to Tucson, Arizona, to be with my wife's family, as we do every Christmas. I usually got to the airport two hours before my flight for my business trips, and this had been no exception. When I got there, though, I saw that the security line was out the door.

It was the holiday, so people were traveling with a lot of extra packages. It took twice as long as it normally would to get to the front of the line.

When I finally got to the gate, I found out that my flight had been oversold. The gate agent was looking for people to voluntarily give up their seats for a later flight in exchange for a $ 100 travel ticket. If she didn't get enough volunteers, she would have to persuade people not to take the flight. Luckily, several people took her up on the offer and the rest of us boarded.

I love the holidays but I don't love holiday travel.
