Hazel Mayfield usually cooks the Thanksgiving meal for her extended family in Houston, Texas. She usually welcomes friends and neighbors eager to sample her fried turkey, green bean casserole, candied yams, homemade cornbread dressing, and dirty rice — just a few of her signature dishes. Known as Suga Mama, because her grandchildren think she's so sweet, the 91-year-old typically likes to do her own shopping for the ingredients to make her special dishes.

"My mother is the head cook of the family," said Paulette Mouton, Mayfield's daughter. "Because of her reputation, you know, there're people in and out all day, everybody's family comes through. They want to get some of Suga Mama's cooking. We're from Louisiana and we cook all that." (One in six Americans could go hungry in 2020 as pandemic persists.)

But Mayfield hasn't been to the grocery store since March. And there is little about Thanksgiving 2020

that's usual. Hundreds of thousands of American families have re-imagined the holiday with virtual celebrations, canceled or delayed travel plans, or for small gatherings with people in their households in response to COVID-19, the deadly virus that has killed more than 250,000 in the U. S. and spoiled life around the world.

This year, Mayfield's family members are lamenting(悲叹) the absence of a big gathering. They've explained to their young children and grandchildren why this year's Thanksgiving is different. Mayfield's youngest daughter, Michelle Sanders, says it's tough helping her grandchildren understand why they can't see some of their other family members.

"It's really hard, trying to explain to them," Sanders said. "When you're talking to them and they want to come over, you have to tell them no. They really don't know how to be careful."

Sanders added, "And, they don't understand that, being three, four, and six, you know they don't really understand that. So, it's ... it's really, really hard, and heartbreaking."

24. What kind of person is Hazel Mayfield?
- A. Helpful and kind-hearted. B. Stubborn and enthusiastic.
C. Talented and instructive. D. Grateful and sensitive.
25. Why are there people in and out of Hazel Mayfield's house?

26. How do people react to this year's Thanksgiving?
- A. They try to get together with their family members in the open.
B. They have to avoid big gatherings even with family members.
C. They feel difficult to persuade their children to get together.
D. They are pleased with the absence of Thanksgiving celebration.
27. What can we infer from Sanders' words?
- A. Children are delighted to celebrate their Thanksgiving Day.
B. Adults feel it difficult to get together with their children.
C. Children are still too young to understand the situation.
D. It's tough helping children overcome their problems.

The world's hottest rainforest is located not in the Amazon or anywhere else you might expect, but inside Biosphere(生物圈) 2, the experimental scientific research facility in the desert outside Tucson, Arizona. A recent study of tropical trees planted there in the early 1990s reported a surprising result: They have withstood temperatures higher than any likely to be experienced by tropical forests this century.

The study adds to a growing number of findings that are giving forest scientists something that's been in short supply lately: hope. Plants may have unexpected resources that could help them survive — and perhaps even prosper — in a hotter, more carbon-rich future. And while tropical forests still face both human and natural threats, some researchers believe terrible reports of their approaching decline due to climate change may have been overstated.

"Biology is clever," says Scott Saleska, an ecologist at the University of Arizona in Tucson and co-leader of the Biosphere 2 study. "It's a lot smarter than our models yet represent."

The last few years have seen a flood of alarming reports about forests and climate change's effects on them. Scientists have announced that the Amazon forest is no longer a reliable carbon sink; the Amazon rainforest may be nearing a tipping point; tropical forests globally are already close to the hottest temperatures they can tolerate and climate change is killing off old trees.

One thing is certainly true: Our fossil fuel emissions are creating a climate that humans have never seen and trees haven't experienced in a very long time. "We're pushing tropical forests into temperatures they've never seen since the Cretaceous — since there were dinosaurs," says Abigail Swann, an ecologist and climate scientist at the University of Washington in Seattle.

28. Where is the hottest rainforest located according to the article?

- A. In the Amazon tropical forest.
- B. In a research facility in Arizona.
- C. In the rainforest in Brazil.
- D. At the University of Arizona.

29. What can we conclude from the second paragraph?

- A. Forest scientists still lack numbers of findings about rainforest.
- B. Plants may not survive in hot and carbon rich future than expected.
- C. Plants may survive in hotter and more carbon-rich environment.
- D. People may overstate the climate change in the future.

30. How will the fossil fuel emissions change the climate?

- A. We have never seen the climate change due to greenhouse.
- B. The fossil fuel emissions may destroy the whole ecosystem.
- C. The temperatures may reach as high as those in dinosaur period.
- D. The fossil fuel emissions may create a climate plants can't bear.

31. What may be the best title of the article?

- A. The world's hottest rainforest in the wild.
- B. Plants may die of fossil fuel emissions due to mankind.
- C. The Amazon forest is declining quickly in the future.
- D. Plants may stand hotter temperature than expected.

D

Zika virus. Malaria. West Nile virus. Dengue fever. Have you ever heard of these illnesses? If so, you likely know what they all have in common. These are a few of the diseases spread by one of the greatest pests known to humankind — the mosquito.

Much of the time, mosquito bites are just itchy. Nothing ruins a backyard barbecue faster than a mass of these bloodsucking insects. However, some mosquitoes carry viruses that cause deadly illnesses. In fact, some experts say mosquitoes are a bigger threat to human life than any other organism.

Over the centuries, mosquitoes are thought to have caused the deaths of 52 billion people. That's half the people who have ever lived on Earth! Even today, illnesses spread by mosquitoes kill more people each year than war does.

It should be no surprise that many people would like to get rid of mosquitoes. What if we could wipe out the entire mosquito population? No more malaria. No more Zika. No more itchy bumps after a summer day spent outdoors. Doesn't that sound great?

Not so fast. Sure, some species of mosquitoes harm humans. But others don't pose any threat at all! In fact, some of these mosquitoes play important parts in their ecosystems. Let's look at a few ways.

Many of our Wonder Friends already know that bees play an important part in pollination(授粉). It turns out, mosquitoes do, too! Most mosquitoes actually drink nectar(花蜜) instead of blood. When they do so, they help pollinate the plants they feed on.

It's also important to remember that even mosquitoes are part of an ecosystem. Without them, the food chain would be disturbed.

Adult mosquitoes are a food source for bats, birds, spiders, and small mammals. Without them, these animals would need to find something else to eat. Some experts even think mosquitoes could be used to help humans.

32. What do Zika virus, Malaria, West Nile virus, and Dengue fever have in common?
 A. They are all pests from the wild forest. B. They can not be cured by human beings.
 C. They can all be spread by mosquitoes. D. They are all caused by bacteria.
33. What does the underlined phrase in the fourth paragraph mean?
 A. Kill something completely. B. Bring up in large numbers.
 C. Control something completely. D. Rely on something completely.
34. What is the author's attitude towards mosquitoes?
 A. Positive. B. Negative. C. Critical. D. Objective.
35. What may the author continue to write about in the following?
 A. How mosquitoes are harmful to human beings. B. How mosquitoes are helpful to human beings.
 C. How mosquitoes cause various illness to mankind. D. How mosquitoes are eaten by small mammals.

We all know about the health benefits of swimming. It offers a great workout for the body — it builds endurance, muscle strength and cardiovascular fitness. If you don't mind getting wet, it can be fun too.

36 Well, many people are fond of it, based on evidence that it can actually be good for us.

Cold-water swimming — sometimes called wild swimming — involves swimming in natural areas including ponds, rivers and the sea. Jumping in gives a short sharp shock to the body, 37 A cold dip might wake you up, but research has found it can have much bigger benefits than that for your body and mind. As well as being good exercise, spending time outdoors and by water improves wellbeing.

38 One man who suffered constant pain after surgery claimed he was cured by taking a plunge in cold open water. And another swimmer, Sandria Simons, told the BBC “the immersion 4 of your body in cold, salt water, just feeling like you're at one with nature if you like, just feels amazing.”

But what is it that people are gaining from this chilly experience? Doctors say getting into cold water arouses a stress response, but the more you do it, your reaction to stress is reduced. It's also thought to have a strong anti-inflammatory effect. But there are bigger benefits to this stress-reducing exercise. Some experts believe cold-water swimming helps ‘cross-adaptation’, where one form of stress prepares the body for another.

So, if you're convinced that this is for you, take advice: approach it with caution, swim with a friend, and maybe start in the summer, 40

- A. but many participants say they get used to it.
 B. when the water temperatures are higher!
 C. Swimming is good exercise, in part because it is fun.
 D. But who would enjoy swimming in water that's ice cold?
 E. Cold weather limits the months when ocean or lake swimming is possible.
 F. There is much evidence suggesting cold-water swimming's benefits.
 G. For example, it also helps reduce the stress of exercising at high altitude.

55. B 如果你没有看见它，说明你没有在正确的地方看。因而 B 正确。

56. D 多亏了卫星数据，我们发现海平面每年上升 3.3 毫米。Data 数据符合语境。

57. C 从后文看每十年将在原来基础上再增加 1 毫米，这里表示海平面上升速度，因而 C 符合语境。

58. C 我们不能用眼睛通过看海洋看见每年几毫米的海平面上升。eyeball 这里为动词为盯住之意，符合本文语境。

59. B 因为海浪潮水我们不能通过看海洋发现细微变化，ocean 符合这里语境。

60. D 虽然我们看不见，但从短期和长期来看，我们肯定能看见海平面上升的影响。所以 D 符合语境。

Text 1

W: What did you do on the weekend?

M: Well, on Saturday I wanted to go for a picnic but it rained, so I washed my car instead. And on Sunday I played tennis with my friend.

Text 2

W: I wonder if there is a service charge here.

M: I think so. The menu says the service charge is 10 percent for a meal.

Text 3

M: Are you going to travel while you're here?

W: I'd love to, but I can't. Next time I come to Texas, I hope it's for fun, not for work!

Text 4

W: As you can see, the kitchen has one door into the dining room, another into the family room and a third to the outside.

M: The door into the family room isn't big enough. Could it be made wider?

Text 5

M: I'm really exhausted, but I don't want to miss the movie.

W: If I were you, I'd sleep early tonight and see the movie later. Anyway, we'll have a test tomorrow.

Text 6

M: I've got five tickets for a robot exhibition tomorrow afternoon. Would you like to go with us?

W: Sure. Thank you. I wonder if we visitors can buy the robot products.

M: Sure, as long as you have enough money. But why? To take care of your baby?

W: No. As you know, my mom is getting aged and often feels lonely. So I want to get one to accompany her.

M: Mm, good girl. I hear this kind of robots sells well. By the way, when shall I pick you up?

W: How about 3:30 p.m.?

M: That might be too late. When we get there, it is to be closed. How about two hours earlier?

W: Deal!

Text 7

M: Mrs. Mills, have you set everything up and e-mail me all the information?

W: Sorry, Mr. Jones. I will finish that in half an hour. I just got off the phone with Mr. Dawson. He wants to schedule a meeting with you for later today or tomorrow.

M: What does he want to talk about?

W: One of the factories that make his products. He said it was pretty urgent.

M: Well, I don't want to stay too late like last night. My wife was not happy with me!

W: How about tomorrow at 11:00 a. m.? I checked your schedule, and the only thing you have tomorrow is a meeting at 2: 00 p. m.

M: 11:00 a.m. tomorrow sounds fine.

W: We're looking for someone to sell our new software products. The job requires independence and, above all, a pleasant manner with customers.

M: I agree. I've worked in sales for years and have always tried to really listen to my customers to find out what they need.

W: That's great. What about your experience with software programs?

M: Well, I've trained people to use a similar software product for the past two years at my current job, so I really feel I know the product.

W: Hmm, interesting, and your sales experience?

M: I've been with my present company for four years and in my present position since two years ago. During the time, I've been named "Salesperson of the Month" three times, and have taken top sales awards several times as well.

W: Good. You are just the person we want.

Text 9

M: Do you know there is a new art exhibition in the city?

W: No, I don't. Is it being held at the City Exhibition Center?

M: I thought it was there at first, or at one of the popular art galleries. But no, and you would never guess where it is.

W: Come on. Tell me.

M: It's taking place inside the International Shopping Center.

W: Seriously? That's so unusual.

M: Yeah. I thought it was ridiculous, but now I find it kind of cool.

W: What are they showing at the exhibition? Paintings?

M: There's a painting section, and most paintings are the works of contemporary artists. Only a few are painted by traditional painters.

W: What's the major difference between the two?

M: Well, contemporary artists' works are more abstract compared with the traditional paintings.

W: I see. So what about other sections?

M: There's a photography section, a sculpture section and a video section.

W: What's being shown in the video section?

M: Short movies. It's actually the second most popular section of all four after the photography section.

W: Interesting. Which section is the least popular?

M: The sculpture one.
