I live in Xizhou in Yunnan Province, on the historic Tea Horse Road. I have to admit that when I first heard that Paul Salopek was going to walk the entire globe on his own two feet, I was blown away. I couldn't imagine that there could be such an unusual person in the world.

Last May, I met Paul. He told me that it was his first time in China. He talked to me with great excitement about the history, migrations, and discoveries in my region of China. He spoke of the Shu-Yandu Dao (the Southern Silk Road), the travels of the 17th-century Chinese explorer Xu Xiake, the Tea Horse Road and the early 20th-century American botanist Joseph Rock. He also talked of Xuanzang. Paul considered many of them heroes and in a sense Chinese pioneers of slow journalism.

I decided to accompany Paul on his walk toward Yunnan. On September 28, 2021, we set out. Our days were simple: walk, eat, sleep, and repeat. We woke up at sunrise, set off in high spirits, and rested at sunset, dragging ourselves into exhausted sleep.

We met many people on the road. Some were curious, surrounding us and watching us; some gave us directions; some invited us into their home to take a rest; some spoke of the charm of their hometown. We met many beautiful souls, simple souls and warm souls. We were walking with our Together, we were impressed by the biodiversity of the Gaoligong Mountains. As I walked on ancient paths through mountains, I seemed to hear the antique voices of past travelers urging me to be careful on the road.

Looking back on the more than 200 miles I walked with Paul, I came to a realization. Walking for its own sake, while healthy and admirable, is only a small part of the benefit of moving with our feet. A deeper reward is rediscovering the world around us, shortening the distance between each other, and sharing each other's cultures.

In Southeast Ohio, countless orange-stained streams are colored by the iron oxide (氧化铁) pollution from abandoned coal mines. Although rivers can be cleaned up by neutralizing the acidity of acid mine drainage (AMD) (矿山酸性废水), it's an expensive process. However, two professors at Ohio University have come up with a way to help with the clean-up by collecting the iron oxide from polluted rivers to make pigments (颜料) for artists.

Coal was once an important part of Ohio's economy, and the state produced approximately 2.35 billion tons from its underground mines between 1800 and 2010. But before 1977, when the US introduced the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act, mines that were no longer needed were often simply abandoned. As a result, many of the mines have become polluters, with AMD affecting 1300 miles of Ohio streams.

Guy Riefler and John Sabraw from Ohio University partnered to take their idea from an interesting little science project to something bigger. In 2018, alongside local non-profit Rural Action, they partnered with a paint company Gamblin to create a limited run of 500 oil paints. Named the "Reclaimed Earth Colors" set, the paints were popular among artists, allowing them to present an environmentally conscious aspect in their work. Through their social enterprise, True Pigments, they are now putting their clean-up model to the test by building their first full-scale treatment facility.

Once the treatment facility is operational, True Pigments aims to collect approximately 2 million pounds of iron oxide annually and clean up seven miles of stream. A previous project that neutralized the acidity of stream water on the west branch of Sunday Creek saw 17 species of native fish return after two years. True Pigments is confident that its facility will lead to a similar outcome.

True Pigments has received funding from the Ohio Department of Natural Resources (ODNR). By funding True Pigments, the ODNR hopes that the facility can help address an environmental issue and recover and improve water quality and provide jobs for the local community and create a supply of iron oxide for other uses.

28. How do professors from Ohio University help clean polluted rivers?

A. By removing plastic waste from streams.

B. By reducing the acidity of polluted rivers.

C. By making paints with the iron oxide from the rivers.

D. By organizing people to join in the clean-up activities.

29. What does the author intend to do in paragraph 2?

A. Summarize the previous paragraph.

B. Add some background information.

C. Provide some advice for the readers.

D. Introduce a new topic for discussion.

30. What do we know about Guy Riefler and John Sabraw's project?

A. It is well received by artists.

B. It saves the production cost of oil paints.

C. It aims to introduce their clean-up model.

D. It prevents factories from polluting rivers.

31. What can be the best title for the text?

A. Reclaiming Earth Pigments

B. Turning Waste into Treasure

C. Painting a Greener Future

Scars (伤疤) covered the female pit bull's (比特犬) face, showing that she had been forced to fight other dogs. But when PETA's volunteers found her, she was fighting to survive on the end of a chain left outdoors in cold temperature. We adopted the starving dog, named her Melissa and soon discovered that she was so dog aggressive that she would try to attack her own reflection. By the time a neighbor reported Tupac's unhappy condition, the sweet pit bull was 20 pounds underweight. He could barely hold up his head. Tupac had spent his entire life on a chain, and when he got sick and stopped eating, his ignorant owner, who was eventually charged with cruelty to animals, didn't bother to call anyone for help. A vet recommended euthanasia (安乐死), which at that point was the most merciful thing that could have been done for him.

Melissa's and Tupac's situations are far from unique. Pit bulls are the most abused dogs on the planet and that's why PETA supports a ban on breeding them, preventing more pit bulls from ending up in a world where so many of them are abused and abandoned. Tens of thousands of them are euthanized each year for lack of a good home.

We wish every pit bull had a loving home, but for every pit bull who is treated as a member of the family, countless others tremble at the end of a chain, alone and forgotten, or are beaten and starved. I invite anyone who truly cares about pit bulls and doesn't just desire to possess them to join us in working to stop their overpopulation and all the suffering that comes with it.

32. How is the topic introduced?

A. By analyzing causes.

B. By making comparisons.

C. By giving examples.

D. By presenting research findings.

33. What does the author mean by saying Melissa's and Tupac's situations are far from unique?

A. Many other breeds are trained to fight.

B. They're the only two dogs that need help.

C. Many other pit bulls are abused by humans.

D. Many other dogs are banned from breeding.

34. What does the underlined word "breeding" mean in para 2?

A. Adjust.

B. Increase.

C. Resist.

D. Purchase.

35. What's the author's purpose in writing the text?

A. To suggest we not adopt a pit bull.

B. To encourage us to report dog abuse.

C. To tell us what pit bulls are mainly fed for.

D. To draw attention to the suffering of pit bulls.
