Four Interesting Festivals Around the World

Noosa Festival of Surfing, Australia

Noosa is one of the world's best surfing destinations. Big waves crash onto the sunny and expansive beaches, backed by bars, cafes and the Noosa National Park, attracting talents even from the world's greatest surf spots like Hawaii, California and New Zealand. Lighthearted activities such as art shows, live music and dog surfing competitions accompany the more serious competitions.

Hangout Music Festival, Alabama, the USA

For a celebration of some of the finest creators reaching the highest position in the music charts, head to the coast of Alabama for the start of the summer festival season. The annual music festival on the white-sand beaches of the city of Gulf Shores in the southeastern US state is an all-out musical feast, with some huge names in the music world singing live.

Cartagena International Film Festival, Colombia

As the oldest film festival in Latin America, Cartagena International Film Festival will enter its 64th year in 2024. The colourful streets of the Caribbean coastal city, Cartagena, come to life with screenings. The city becomes an attraction for fans every year during the festival. Celebrating creative freedom and expression, the film festival is the best opportunity to dive into filmmaking culture.

Copenhagen Photo Festival, Denmark

The Danish capital hosts the largest photo festival in Northern Europe, showing international photography of present day in a surprising setting at the water's edge in an urban coastal wilderness, formerly an industrial shipyard site. The 10-day festival appeals to photographers around the region, with the 2023 festival turning the lens (镜头) to the idea of "rewilding".

21. Which festival is likely to attract an adventurer?

- A. Noosa Festival of Surfing. B. Cartagena International Film Festival.
C. Hangout Music Festival. D. Copenhagen Photo Festival.

I believe that we can use social media for a lot of great things—and it's important especially for business owners like me. Ever since I started my calligraphy business two years ago, I never went a day without going on social media, especially a kind of social app on my phone, on which I promoted my products and services and got in contact with possible customers.

Later I found it got in the way of more important things. I hate to say I was hooked by it, but I was. Every time I turned on my phone, I would dive into it. For a long time, I had been ignoring other parts of my life, like my family, my friends and my happiness. One day, I was thinking that a break should have happened long before to me.

Then I decided to remove the app off my phone for a month and only use that on my computer to keep track of my business. I wanted a clean break to reflect and plan for the future.

I had believed that if I spent less time on the platform, I would miss out much. Actually, I was so wrong. During this month off, I realized there was much to enjoy in life. I found more time to enjoy my hobbies and contacted my good friends that I had lost touch with. I was refilled with energy in all aspects of my life.

This one month off the app on the phone was healthy for me. If it were not for my business, I would like not to have it on my phone. I downloaded the app again on my phone, but only use it to post my own content. I didn't intend to paint social media in a negative light, but now I just don't think the way I was using it was healthy. It's difficult to find balance, but I'm going to try to do it anyway. I'm going back, but it's going to be different.

24. What did the author mainly do on social media?

- A. He learned calligraphy on his own.
B. He kept in touch with his friends.
C. He worked on business activities.
D. He shared advice on keeping fit.

25. What do the underlined words "hooked by" in paragraph 2 mean?

- A. Addicted to. B. Impressed by.
C. Injured by. D. Exposed to.

26. What did the author learn after removing the social app from his cellphone?

- A. It was meaningless to share on social media.
- B. There was lots of fun away from social media.
- C. The social app contributed little to his business.
- D. The social app in the computer was more practical.

27. Why does the author decide to go back to social media?

- A. One month away from social media upsets him.
- B. He wants to seek more hobbies on social media.
- C. He has confidence in balancing social media and life.
- D. His friends ask him to communicate on social media.

C

The Masai (马赛人) are continually trying to keep their own ways in an increasingly modern world. They live along the border of Kenya and Tanzania in East Africa, moving their homes from time to time to follow their cattle, the source of their livelihood. They rely on their cattle in many parts of their life. They like drinking the cows' milk.

They don't kill their cattle for food. But if a cow is killed, the parts of its body are used to make containers, shoes, clothing, ropes, bed coverings and so on. Not all of the men have cows. The more cattle a man owns, the richer he is considered to be. A man who owns 50 or fewer cattle is considered poor. Rich men have a thousand or more. The cattle, though owned by the man, are considered to belong to the man's entire family. The family names the cattle and can recognize each animal's special voice.

The Masai men have become known as warriors (勇士), protecting their cattle against other wild animals. They wear their red long hair. Most women often take care of their children, cook food, clean clothes and make clothing at home. They also make necklaces, dresses and headdresses. A few women can also become authorities (当权者) once they are powerful enough. They speak a language called Maa.

The houses of Masai made from sticks and grass, which are held together with a mixture of mud, are not very firm or safe. These plain houses with some basic supplies are built in a circle and make up a Masai village. They are not meant to last long since the migration (迁徙) of the cow population means that the Masai move as well. In the meantime, in order to prevent animals from entering, they also form a wall of branches. The whole setup is to protect the cattle, which sleep at night in the middle of the village. They seem to live a natural and self-sufficient life but lack modern civilisation.

28. What do we know about the Masai?

- A. They don't move in their lives.
- B. They each have their own cows.
- C. They don't kill their cattle at all.
- D. They are heavily dependent on cattle.

Researchers concerned with space exploration say they have discovered new evidence that Mars once had a large northern ocean. The discovery adds to existing evidence that the ancient Mars had the right conditions to possibly support some form of life.

Today, any water on Mars is believed to be in the form of ice because of the planet's extremely cold desert temperatures. But there is a rich amount of evidence suggesting that rivers, lakes and even oceans once existed on Mars. A study by the American space agency NASA suggested that about 4.3 billion years ago, Mars likely had an ocean that covered nearly half of Mars' northern hemisphere (半球). Another NASA-supported study guessed that about 3 billion years ago, the climate in much of the planet's northern hemisphere was very similar to today's Earth. The study noted that at that time, Mars likely had a much thicker atmosphere than today and had an active northern ocean.

Two American researchers recently released a set of maps to provide new environmental evidence of a large ancient ocean on Mars' low-lying northern hemisphere. The team collected data from satellite images and photos of Mars. They then combined them to create maps of the planet's northern hemisphere. Using the maps, the researchers were able to piece together evidence of shorelines that sat at the edge of a huge body of water about 3.5 billion years ago.

The researchers published their findings in the Journal of Geophysical Research: Planets. Benjamin Cardenas, an assistant professor at The Penn State University, was a co-writer of the study. He said the study's findings showed the possible ocean in that area of Mars was changeable and interesting. "It was dynamic (动态的). The sea level rose significantly," he said. "Rocks were being deposited (沉积) along its basins at a fast rate. There was a lot of change happening here." Besides, Cardenas suggested the new study also provided useful information on Mars' ancient climate and developmental history. "Based on these findings, we know there had to have been a period when it was warm enough and the atmosphere was thick enough to support this much liquid water at one time," he said.

32. How does the author develop paragraph 2?

- A. By drawing comparisons.
- B. By giving examples.
- C. By listing figures.
- D. By asking questions.

An Amazing Performance of Chinese Classical Dance

第二节 (满分25分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Daniel got a job as a delivery man to work his way through college. His parents couldn't save up all the money he needed to get into law school, so since he was 16, he has been taking summer jobs to earn extra money.

The boy usually wakes up at 5 am in summer or winter, riding his rusty (生锈的) old bike delivering packages. It isn't an easy job, especially during winter. Besides that, his old bike is slow, making things harder. But that isn't a problem for Daniel. "Come on, boy! We can do this," he says to himself.

Daniel's route is always the same and people in the neighborhood have already known him. He calls them by their names, and they often wave and greet him as he passes.

One day, Daniel came to McReynolds' house. He parked his bike at the doorstep. He rang the doorbell but no one answered. He tried again, still no answer. Then he left the parcel at the doorstep.

As Daniel jumped back on his bike, he noticed his bike broken down. "Bad luck!" But as he turned around, he saw a strange man secretly looked around and placed a package under his jacket. Daniel shouted at the man, "Hey there! What are you doing? That's not yours!"

The man saw Daniel and started to run. Daniel looked at his broken bike helplessly and ran fast after the man, shouting, "Stop! Thief!" When the man saw that Daniel was gaining on him, he threw the package at him. Daniel caught it, but he didn't give up the chase. Then the man tripped over a stone and fell on the floor. Daniel came a few seconds later and got him.

The ruckus (喧闹) alarmed all the neighbors. Then the police were called. McReynolds came out from the house, "I couldn't get the door when you rang because I was taking a shower. Thank you for stopping him!" Daniel smiled back at her and was turning around to leave.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为150左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

When Daniel was to pick up his bike, he heard a voice behind him, "Wait!"

Minutes later, McReynolds returned, with a beautiful blue bike.
