According to the World Health Organization, a global group that studies public health, 1.1 billion young adults are at risk of developing hearing loss. Smartphones are largely to blame. Can some headphones really damage your hearing?

Nerves carry messages to each other, such as sounds or sensations. Most hearing loss is the result of nerve wreck. Scientists use decibels to measure volume. You can listen to 85 decibels pretty much all day without causing any damage. That is about the noise level of busy city traffic. Things quickly become dangerous once you get louder than that. The noise level produced at a rock concert or by a chain saw is about 115 decibels. At this level, damage can happen in less than a minute. You might not immediately notice large hearing loss. It will add up over time. Some smartphones can crank music to 120 decibels. Say: you listen to 10 songs in a row at that volume. You might notice hearing loss by the time you take off your headphones.

What kind of headphones should people use? All of them have different benefits and downsides. Ear buds have a bad reputation because they sit in your ear canal. This allows them to release the sound closer to your ear. That means what you hear is almost the full force of the sound. Big, padded over-ear headphones do not sit as close to your eardrum. They still trap in sound, though. Sound from these headphones also reaches your eardrum at nearly full force. Then there are some special over-ear headphones, the kind with foam earphone covers which are better at blocking noise. They deliver sound around your ear instead of straight into it. It might not sound as good, but it's healthier for your ears. Solid-plastic in-ear headphones are not very good at blocking out background noise. This might make you want to pump up the volume.

Doctors recommend that their patients get fitted for headphones which will help block background noise. In theory, this should encourage people to listen at lower volumes. But they are not sure it works that way because they think people just have a habit of turning it all the way up.

英语试题第 4 页 (共 12 页)

24. What does the word "wreck" in Paragraph 2 mean?
A. Loss. B. Damage. C. Tension. D. Decrease.
25. Which activity will probably damage your hearing?
A. Driving at the city center. B. Enjoying ten songs.
C. Using a chain saw. D. Watching an action movie.
26. What can you infer from Paragraph 3?
A. It is the volume that really damages people's hearing.
B. It's unnecessary to turn down the volume for people with normal hearing.
C. Picking right headphones has nothing to do with people's hearing.
D. A good pair of headphones can adjust the volume of the smartphone.
27. What kind of headphone do doctors probably recommend people to use?
A. Solid-plastic in-ear headphones. B. Tiny in-ear headphones.
C. Big padded over-ear headphones. D. Special over-ear headphones.

The fragrance of pressed grapes perfumes the mountain air in the small village of Tharma in Sangri county of the Tibetan autonomous region this time of year.

Grape cultivation in the county, which is the highest location on the planet where grapes are grown, sits at an average altitude of 3600 meters above sea level. It has increased the wealth of the residents and created a whole new local industry that is prospering. Organic grape growing was introduced to the county, which is blessed by a mild climate and moderate sunshine, via an Aid-Tibet project funded by Hunan province, and since 2011, the cultivation area has increased from less than 1 hectare to nearly 666 hectares. The vineyards in Sangri county were recognized in 2021 for their production of green, pollution-free products.

"The harvest season for grapes and the best time for making wine are right now. We've finished with picking the grapes and we've been busy making wine lately," Luo Minglu, a manager at Sangri County Pakdrub Rongshun Zhuangyuan Co-which operates the business was quoted as saying by China News Service.

The company has played a key role in bringing suppliers and local households together to produce wine and other products that have improved the standard of living in the area.

Between 2016 and 2022, the company's cumulative grape yield reached 590 metric tons. More than 500 villagers were employed last year, with more than 2.9 million yuan ($406,000) spent on salaries. The grape yield and the wine production of the company had reached 350 tons and 150 tons by 2022 respectively.

Yangjen Lhamo, an employee at Sangri County Pakdrub Rongshun Zhuangyuan, said she and her sister have worked at the company for years, and not only do they enjoy their toils and spoils but the vineyards are located very close to home. "I earn nearly 6,000 yuan a month, and I am very pleased with my job," she said. "Thanks to the good policies from the government, it is easy to have a better life if we work hard".

28. What makes Sangri suitable for grape cultivation?
A. An altitude of 3600 meters from the horizon.
B. The fertile soil in Sangri county of this region.
C. The climate neither too hot nor too cold.
D. The ample sunshine and the rainfalls.
29. What is the function of the last two paragraphs?
A. To present their satisfying working conditions.
B. To describe their busy but meaningful daily lives.
C. To explain the good policies from the government.
D. To show the improving standards of living in this area.
30. Where does this article most probably come from?
A. A scientific paper. B. A meeting minute. C. A newsreel. D. A travel brochure.
31. What's the best title of this passage?
A. World's highest grapes cultivate better life in Tibet
B. Grape yield and ecological balance go hand in hand
C. The wine production is booming in China
D. Grape industry soared up in Sangri

D

Common phrases like "no pains, no gains" give the impression that we ought to be suffering while we study. It's almost as though the only way to know if we're putting in enough work is the sense of hardship we bear.

When we haven't taken the time to come up with another strategy, all we know how to do is shut ourselves in a room with a book. It's no surprise that we find revision boring and difficult. Just as children learn from playing, we can learn from doing, or at least from study techniques that engage us, rather than make us switch off.

Shutting yourself away can make you learn to hate studying. This leads to a situation where instead of being able to concentrate on your work, you obsess about how unfair it is that you must study. When you feel bitter about your work, it's very difficult to make yourself start, or approach it with enthusiasm. This can be part of a vicious cycle that traps you into ineffective revision, your poor progress fuelling further bitterness. Just being around other people really helps fight against feelings of loneliness and, thankfully, it's perfectly possible to work in the company of other people. We just need to learn how to deal with distractions.

It's not necessary to avoid all company, just idle company. Studying in the same room with someone who is ironing or working out is perfectly possible. People who are bored and looking to be distracted, however, are terrible to work around. They constantly try to keep others in conversation. It's also a good idea to avoid the company of people engaged in activities that you would rather be doing than studying. Working while sitting next to someone playing video games is much more likely to end with a new high score than a productive few hours of revision. If being around others means working in a noisy environment, a pair of headphones and some background music can block out noises. They also act as a psychological barrier, so that people think twice before interrupting you.

When you're studying for a big exam, it seems like your whole life is taken up with study. Being in the same room with friends and family can lessen feelings of isolation. Also connecting with other people makes us happy, so it's important not to give that up and to make sure that we take the time to socialize.

32. What is the author's attitude to the saying "no pains, no gains"?

- A. Serious. B. Positive. C. Negative. D. Uncaring.

33. What should you do if you are studying in a noisy environment?

- A. Give indication of not wanting to be interrupted.
B. Give up others' company at once.
C. Think twice before taking any action.
D. Force yourself to be accustomed to the environment.

34. What does Paragraph 4 mainly talk about?

- A. How to focus mind on study.
B. How to choose a perfect place to study.
C. Learning problems students are faced with.
D. Ways to deal with distractions.

35. What is the author's purpose in writing the text?

- A. To encourage students to work hard.
B. To introduce effective learning strategies.
C. To remind students to balance study and play.
D. To advise students to study in the company of family members.

How to Choose the Right Career?

Choosing the right career can be difficult, and consequently you will find many of us can hardly find a suitable job in our daily life. 36

37

Assess your hobbies. It is very easy to turn your hobbies or something you love doing into a future career. Many hobbies are related to real world needs and positions. Consider what you like to do and how that might fit into a career. Remain humble as you work toward your goal.

Assessing your skills

Consider what skills you are good at. If you are particularly good at certain skills, such as fixing things or making things, this can provide you with a great future career, since skilled labor is often in demand and you will find it fairly easy to find work. 38 People who interact with others well can easily get careers as social workers or in marketing and similar business positions.

英语试题第7页 (共12页)

Considering your current state

Explore yourself. Figuring out what you should do with your life may sometimes require you to get to know yourself better. If you want a career that will really make you happy, you have to have an impressive awareness of what you want and what you enjoy. 39

Thinking about your future

Examine your future financial security. One of the most important things to consider is if the career path you're choosing will provide you with an acceptable level of financial security. In other words, will you be able to make enough money to support yourself and your family? Meanwhile, you are supposed to pay special attention to your future job stability.

40 Accordingly, you will need to consider if the career you choose is stable enough for you and your desires for the future.

Admittedly, the combination of the above four steps proved extremely effective when choosing the future career. Once you get started, you'll find it quite beneficial and even enjoyable!

A. Evaluating your interests.

B. Assessing your personality.

C. Therefore, having a defined career direction will help you achieve your goal.

D. Job markets changes a lot as society needs different things at different times.

E. For some people, this means taking some time off to decide what's vital to them.

F. If you have a good command of communicating with others, there are jobs for you as well.

G. However, with serious self-planning and self-reflection, you can set yourself on a path towards a fulfilling career.

第二节 读后续写 (满分 20 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

I spent most of my teenage years in an old farmhouse in the Durham County countryside. That was more than 30 years ago, but life there dated back to an even earlier era. I spent my summer days doing manual labor in the tobacco fields, while my summer evenings were spent preparing vegetables in the backyard. My fall weekends were often spent cutting wood and storing logs for the fire. Some of my neighbors still had outhouses. We had an indoor TV receiver which helped us tune into the few television stations we could watch.

Living where we did, we could see three or four other houses from our own, none of them within shouting distance. We knew our neighbors, most of whom were elderly. My father wouldn't let other folks do without when he had enough, so we helped them out when they needed it.

Jimmy lived across the street, on the far side of a tobacco field. He was seventy years old and lived alone. He lost his wife two years ago. He had barely supported himself these last couple of years since his health had gotten worse. One day, we went to visit him at his home. It was a small wooden house with dirty windows and a curtain that had been mended several times. The poor old man would sit in an armchair by the window, holding a faded photo, and with tears in his eyes, recall happy memories of his wife.

One weekend, my father went to check on Jimmy, but a rare heavy snow happened to fall. It was so heavy that he couldn't get his old truck up Jimmy's uneven, snow-covered road. Nobody could understand what made Dad climb the 400 yards or so to Jimmy's house. My brother and I were waiting anxiously at home. After a long time, he rushed home and told us that Jimmy was sick and had no firewood left.

My father asked us if we would like to help. We all nodded our heads willingly, but my brother was secretly worried. He asked my father how we could help. Although we could meet Jimmy's needs for things like food and firewood, my father held the belief that the loss of his wife made Jimmy unhappy, and wanted to offer Jimmy a moment of joy. We left the house and walked across the snow-covered fields. Our footprints went deep in the snow, only to disappear as the snow continued to fall. We headed across the field, aiming for Jimmy's house.

We knocked on Jimmy's door, and he greeted us. Jimmy appeared calm in the face of the dangerous snowstorm. However, we could see that his spirits were low due to sickness. We lit a fire to try and get some warmth into the house. We sat down and had a long meaningful conversation with Jimmy. At first, he frowned, but then his face slowly broke into a smile. He was happy that his neighbors cared about his well-being, and said having us over for company was the best gift we could have given him.
