B

"Don't answer it," I said to Sam. Our door in the inner city is constantly knocked on; our previous door in the suburbs rarely so. Sam has a full-time job and cannot spend his days answering requests to fix leaking baths or carry cash to the bank.

Sam opened the door and it was Mervin.

"There's a bird on the second floor," he said. "It's in trouble."

Sam followed Mervin upstairs. Mervin pointed and turned to let Sam look. It was a pigeon, the most common of all birds; the bird most likely to foul your newly washed car. And it wasn't flying away. It was stamping in circles. As Sam bent to look, Mervin coughed, "Number two."

Sam asked him to repeat that. "Number two," Mervin said. "The pigeon has been sitting in his own number two, and now it's stuck to his foot."

It had rained for five days, and the bird was young. It could have been sheltering in a wet nest of its own waste, which had then dried on its foot, preventing it from flying away. The pigeon moved in a few more circles. Sam bent to take another look. Mervin said, "All right, then," and walked away.

"Why does everyone think you must solve the problems around here?" I said to Sam when he returned with his story. "It's a bird. Just leave it on the stairs, and let nature take its course." Sam didn't agree. Then he went to the garage and emptied the cardboard box containing our imported camping mats. He returned with the gray pigeon in the box. He showed the bird to our children and they decided to keep it.

They put its foot in the warm water bath and got rid of its waste. Immediately the pigeon erupted in a bomb of feathers and began flying.

24. How did the author respond to the knocks?
A. She was astonished. B. She was panicked into fleeing.
C. She got passionate. D. She felt fed up.
25. Why was the pigeon moving in circles?
A. It was learning to fly. B. It was trapped by its waste.
C. It got caught in the rain. D. It was badly injured.
26. What did Sam use the cardboard box to do?
A. Shelter from rain. B. Give it to Mervin.
C. Make a nest for the bird. D. Wash camping mats.
27. What can we learn about Sam from the text?
A. He is sweet. B. He is intellectual.
C. He is manful. D. He is approachable.

C

Every year around the world, humans waste an estimated 1.3 billion tons of food. This happens even though many people go hungry. So some people have made it their life's work to connect the two: claiming food before it goes to waste and then giving it to people who are hungry.

One of those people is Bret Myers. In 2011, Myers started Nourish Now, a food recovery and food bank in the U.S. state of Maryland. This non-profit organization collects food and then gives it to the poor and organizations that support them.

"Nourish Now is a food recovery-based food bank that recovers food from restaurants, catering companies, grocery stores, hotels, farms and more, and then donates that food directly to families in need and kids in need at local schools."

Each month, it recovers more than 20,000 kilograms of food and serves 700 needy families, schools and social organizations. Every day, staff and volunteers repackage the donations and distribute them to recipients (接受者).

A woman named Rhoda is one of the recipients. She describes the quality of the food delivered to her family by Nourish Now. "It consists of fresh food, fruits and vegetables. You will get bread. Sometimes you get dairy products such as yogurt or milk. And you will get some meat items also. And if you get lucky you might get cooked food, or prepared salads, and stuff like that."

The supplies can feed a family for five days. Each recipient is able to receive food every 30 days. And the packages are made to fit the dietary needs of each family.

Besides families, the organization also donates small meals called snacks to several nearby schools and social organizations.

Nourish Now has grown considerably since it opened. Brenda is one of them. Part of her job as a volunteer is to make sure that none of the food goes to waste.

"In the morning, I make sure that all the things that came late yesterday, get put away so that we use that last, and we used the things that came the day before first, so that we're always giving fresh food and we're not throwing out anything."

28. What do we know about Nourish Now?

- A. It donates money to the poor.
- B. It benefits from collecting food.
- C. It gets food from many places.
- D. It distributes food only to the poor.

29. What does the underlined word "them" in Paragraph 2 refer to?

- A. Nourish Now.
- B. The poor.
- C. Food banks.
- D. Organizations.

30. What does the author want to clarify with the example of Rhoda in Paragraph 5?

- A. The food is fresh and rich.
- B. She isn't satisfied with the food supplied.
- C. Eating better can keep people healthier.
- D. She can get food donations every five days.

31. What is the best title for the text?

- A. People Should Take Care of the Weak
- B. The Poor Are Suffering from Starvation
- C. Nourish Now Calls on People to Save Food
- D. Nourish Now Uses Leftover Food to Feed the Hungry

D

Nearly every week, we hear news about the latest successes and failures in driverless vehicles. But we hear little about how other industries are developing this same kind of technology. One industry heavily involved in researching and developing artificial intelligence, or AI, is agriculture. Companies are experimenting with high-tech tools that can help farmers save time and money, while reducing environment-harming chemicals.

One of the companies is ecoRobotix of Switzerland. It created a robot equipped with AI and cameras to identify all plants on a farm. The robot has four wheels to carry it through the fields in search of weeds. Computer-controlled arms then lower and spray the weeds with small amounts of herbicide (除草剂). Company officials say the robot can fully operate on its own for up to 12 hours a day while being powered by the sun. It uses the same kind of sensor and positioning technology used to guide driverless vehicles. A farmer can also control the equipment through a smartphone.

The co-founder of ecoRobotix, Aurelien Demaurex, says the farm robot can kill weeds with 20 times less herbicide than traditional methods. This is because the system uses exactly the chemical in the exact place required to kill the weeds. Currently, farmers spread weed killers over massive areas to destroy unwanted plants.

Another company developing farm robotics is California-based Blue River Technology. The company has a system called "See & Spray", which it claims was the world's first smart sprayer. The system — which connects to the back of a tractor — is also equipped with AI to identify and chemically kill only the weeds. It can also spray chemicals on wanted plants to help them grow. Ben Chostner, vice president of business development for Blue River Technology, explains in a company video that See & Spray technology uses the same deep learning methods used in facial recognition.

Ben said, "The first time the machine saw a pigweed, it didn't know what kind of plant it was. But we taught it — by giving it tens of thousands of examples of that pigweed — and now it's an expert in pigweed."

32. How will AI benefit agriculture?

- A. It will fund agriculture research.
- B. It contributes to low-cost farming.
- C. It can avoid harmful chemicals.
- D. It frees all farmers from field work.

33. What do the products of the two companies have in common?

- A. They use recognition technology.
- B. They are powered by solar energy.
- C. They are connected with smartphones.
- D. They can help wanted plants grow rapidly.

34. What do Ben Chostner's words suggest about the robot?

- A. It is environmentally friendly.
- B. It is good at self-improving.
- C. It has the learning ability.
- D. It can track various plants.

35. What is the text mainly about?

- A. The experiment in farming robots.
- B. A new trend in artificial intelligence.
- C. Modern See & Spray technology.
- D. Artificial intelligence in agriculture.

How to Choose the Right Career?

Choosing the right career can be difficult, and consequently you will find many of us can hardly find a suitable job in our daily life. 36

37

Assess your hobbies. It is very easy to turn your hobbies or something you love doing into a future career. Many hobbies are related to real world needs and positions. Consider what you like to do and how that might fit into a career. Remain humble as you work toward your goal.

Assessing your skills

Consider what skills you are good at. If you are particularly good at certain skills, such as fixing things or making things, this can provide you with a great future career, since skilled labor is often in demand and you will find it easy to find work. 38. People who interact with others well can easily get careers as social workers or in marketing and similar business positions.

Considering your current state

Explore yourself. Figuring out what you should do with your life may sometimes require you to get to know yourself better. If you want a career that will really make you happy, you have to have an impressive awareness of what you want and what you enjoy. 39

Thinking about your future

Examine your future financial security. One of the most important things to consider is if the career path you're choosing will provide you with an acceptable level of financial security. In other words, will you be able to make enough money to support yourself and your family? Meanwhile, you are supposed to pay special attention to your future job stability. 40. Accordingly, you will need to consider if the career you choose is stable enough for you and your desires for the future.

Admittedly, the combination of the above four steps proved extremely effective when choosing the future career. Once you get started, you'll find it quite beneficial and even enjoyable!

- A. Evaluating your interests
- B. Assessing your personality
- C. Therefore, having a defined career direction will help you achieve your goal
- D. Job markets changes a lot as society needs different things at different times
- E. For some people, this means taking some time off to decide what's vital to them
- F. If you have a good command of communicating with others, there are jobs for you as well
- G. However, with serious self-planning and self-reflection, you can set yourself on a path towards a fulfilling career

Few 17-year-old girls know how to weld (焊接) two metal pipes together. I have learned this skill in the past five years as a(n) 41 for my father's personal plumbing (管道装置) business. This summer job often needs to deal with the mess that causes physical and mental 42, and, to some extent 43 a tough and elegant attitude. It is often difficult to cope with. But I 44.

Every morning, I have to put on a pair of men's jeans. Most of my peers are 45 to wear it in public. I 46 tied my hair when I rushed out of the house, and 47 in to the front passenger seat of the plumber's construction vehicle.

When my peers were part-time babysitters or lifeguards, I was helping my father in the dirty bathroom or the 48 basement. Thick dust 49 my nose and mouth, and my hands became black. There is nothing beautiful and neat; everything in front of you is 50. Honestly speaking, I felt 51, discouraged and unable to think hard.

Pipe work is a tough job, and I sometimes hate it. I asked myself why I had to 52 these dust and sweat. I can even find another job, a 53 job more like my peers.

54, just like I hate messy pipes, I also hate being affected by these little 55 emotions. After all, the world is built by people who are willing to get their hands 56. Life is a process of 57 chaos and learning to clean up, and pipeline work is no 58.

My dad and I not only create chaos, but we also create 59. When customers are 60 for our work, I understand that we have brought order to their lives in small places. The physical and mental discomfort of plumbing work is worth it.
