B

I arrived home from work, my mind racing. I was scheduled to perform an experiment using a pricey piece of equipment, but I had spent the whole day worrying about the experiment which was on the top of my agenda, and I amazingly longed to shut off my anxious thoughts. So after dinner, I made a cup of hot chocolate, stretched myself on my sofa, and opened a page. Almost instantly, my mind left behind the details of experimental design and stepped into a land of monsters, magic dust, and man-like bears comprising a wonderful world distinct from my daily life. It was exactly what I needed.

Growing up, I was virtually never a big fan of novels. My classmates would be crazy about the latest Harry Potter book, while my copy sat collecting dust on a shelf. Instead, I would choose to read through the reference books related to my disciplines for better grades. After I started graduate school, extracurricular reading didn't appeal to me at all but I spent most of my time on campus digesting research papers and textbooks and my mind couldn't handle processing fact-filled nonfiction books at home, too. So I knew that I needed to find a way to enjoy reading again.

To help me stick with it, I made a New Year's resolution: I would read two fiction books per month for the entire year. The result was an almost instant appreciation of fiction, along with many unexpected results including ones that have benefited my schoolwork.

What surprised me the most was how much I learned. Some of the best books I read were historical fictional stories happening in a realistic historical setting. I learned about life in different countries, as well as struggles people there faced during difficult periods in their histories. The books have helped me build sympathy and understanding, with an unexpected benefit: I've started to think more deeply about the diversity of issues in the scientific community and could serve it, heart and soul.

24. What did the author do to wipe out the anxiety?

- A. He drowned it in chocolate.
- B. He conducted an experiment.
- C. He slept on the sofa leisurely.
- D. He escaped into a fantasy world.

25. What does the author mean by the underlined part in paragraph 2?

- A. Reading novels was a waste of time.
- B. Reading a good book was time well spent.
- C. He was too busy to take good care of his books.
- D. The Harry Potter book wasn't as good as expected.

英语试卷 第5页(共12页)

26. How did the New Year 's resolution benefit the author?

- A. More sympathy went out to him.
- B. His moral values were strengthened.
- C. He learned much about religious diversity.
- D. He gained new insight into his academic discipline.

27. What's the best title of the text?

- A. Reading: A Lifelong Hobby
- B. The Power of Research Papers
- C. Novels: Love at Second Sight
- D. The Benefits of History Reading

C

A group of researchers studying the behavior of Amur tigers, also known as Siberian tigers, have found that they have different "personality" types that help them survive and raise their baby tigers.

According to the previous investigation, Amur tigers are definitely the largest cats in the world. They live in vast forests in wilderness areas of eastern Russia and in protected areas of northern China. There are about 400 of these tigers left in the wild, although there are probably hundreds more living in zoos or reserves.

The researchers based the study on a human test called "The Big Five", which scores people on five personality features. They asked feeders working with 248 cats in two shelters to spy on the tigers and give an account of their personalities. The results divided the tigers into two groups, which the researchers described as having either "majesty" or "steadiness". Tigers in the majesty category were those that appeared "dignified(高贵的) and ambitious". The tigers in the steadiness category were "sincere and tolerant".

Majestic tigers had a higher social status, spent more time hunting live animals, and mated and ate more. The steady tigers seemed gentler and loving toward one another. Rosalind Arden, co-author of the study, said, "It's pleasant to see that you don't have to be dominant, fierce, competitive, and aggressive in order to succeed as a tiger, which doesn't correspond with people's traditional insights into tigers."

There were female and male tigers in both categories. In fact, female Amur tigers are rare and feel exhausted after giving birth to baby tigers so that fathers often help raise the baby tigers. Having a steady personality, especially for male ones, could play a significant role in the relatively long amount of time—two to three years—that baby tigers stay with their parents. The researchers say both personalities have advantages that help the tigers survive threats, including loss of habitat and hunting. The team hopes the study will encourage more support from all walks of life in a bid to guarantee the tigers' conservation.

28. What does the author intend to do in paragraph 2?

- A. To justify an argument. B. To add background information.
C. To summarize the previous paragraph. D. To introduce a new topic for discussion.

29. The researchers conducted the study on Amur tigers by _____.

- A. categorizing them for inspection
B. scoring them on 5 personality features
C. doing comparison experiments in the lab
D. observing them through a personality test

30. What does Rosalind Arden think of their findings?

- A. They improve Amur tigers' welfare.
B. They change the tigers' living conditions.
C. They help the reproduction of Amur tigers.
D. They contradict traditional ideas about tigers.

31. What can be inferred from the last paragraph?

- A. Few sex-related differences exist in tigers' personalities.
B. A steady personality decreases tigers' chance of survival.
C. Greater conservation efforts have been made due to the study.
D. Personality types of baby tigers are influenced by their parents.

D

Personalized medicine changes conventional medicine which typically offers blanket recommendations and offers treatments designed to help more people than they harm but that might not work for you. The approach recognizes that we each possess unique characteristics, and they have an outsize impact on our health.

Around the world, researchers are creating precision tools unimaginable just a decade ago: superfast DNA sequencing(排序), tissue engineering, cell reprogramming, gene editing, and more. The science and technology soon will make it possible to predict your risk of cancer, heart disease, and countless other illnesses years before you get sick. The work also offers prospects for changing genes in removing some diseases.

英语试卷 第7页(共12页)

Last spring, researchers at the National Cancer Institute reported the dramatic recovery of a woman with breast cancer, Judy Perkins. The team, led by Steven Rosenberg, an immune(免疫的) treatment pioneer, had sequenced her cancer cells' DNA to analyze the sudden change. The team also removed a sampling of immune cells and tested them to see which ones recognized her cancer cells' genetic faults. The scientists reproduced the winning immune cells by the billions and put them into Perkins to attack her cancer cells. More than two years later, Perkins, a retired engineer from Florida, shows no signs of cancer.

Thirty years ago, scientists thought that it would be impossible to understand our genetic rules and sequence the 3.2 billion pairs of different elements in our DNA. "It was like you were talking fairy tales," Kurzrock said. "The conventional wisdom was that it would never happen. Never! And then in 2003, never was over."

It took the Human Gene Project 13 years, roughly one billion dollars, and scientists from six countries to sequence one gene complex. Today sequencing costs about a thousand dollars. The latest machines can produce the results in a day. The technology, combined with advanced cell analysis, clarifies the astonishing biochemical variations that make every human body unique.

32. What can we know about personalized medicine?

- A. It has emerged a decade before.
- B. It offers blanket recommendations.
- C. It uses genetic information to help patients.
- D. It administers treatment intended for most people.

33. Which best describes those precision tools?

- A. Promising.
- B. Highly risky.
- C. Fruitless.
- D. Strictly confidential.

34. What happened in the process of treating Judy Perkins' breast cancer?

- A. Sequencing her immune cells.
- B. Reprogramming her cancer cells.
- C. Analysis of her lifestyle changes.
- D. Identification of cancer-fighting cells.

35. What's the last paragraph mainly talking about concerning sequencing?

- A. Its recent advances.
- B. Its wide applications.
- C. Its major disadvantages.
- D. Its attractive prospects.

第二节 (共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Have you ever struggled to understand how someone else feels? Building up your empathy (同理心) skills helps you connect with your friends. 36

What is empathy?

Empathy is a kind of capability that lets you step into someone else's shoes and then figure out how they are feeling. For instance, if you can see your friend is upset after losing a football match and you support them by telling them some warm and motivating words, you are showing empathy. Miranda McKearney set up an organization called EmpathyLab that builds empathy through reading. 37 "Empathy is a force for change," she says.

38

Scientists say empathy isn't something you are born with, it's a skill you can acquire through learning. One way you can do this is by active listening. When someone is talking to you, listen closely and respond in a way that shows you understand their situations and emotions thoroughly. Reading, advocated by EmpathyLab, is also a great way to boost empathy, since stories can take you inside someone else's mind and show you the world through their eyes and emotions.

Put empathy into action.

39 This could mean trying out something that is important to a friend or family member, like exploring their favourite place. EmpathyLab advocated ideas for putting empathy into action in schools or at home. That might be connecting with someone new in your class and having a friendly conversation, or making small changes to your behaviour. All small acts of kindness to others can make a difference, which in turn will be copied by someone else.

40

- A. How can you have more empathy?
- B. Who need empathy most in daily life?
- C. Besides, it also spreads kindness and inspires them to do the same.
- D. To find out more conducts you can do, log in EmpathyLab. UK. com.
- E. Only by putting empathy into action can you relate to others' bad lives.
- F. She believes even small, supportive actions can have a positive impact.
- G. Miranda recommends going into the thick of people's lives to show empathy.

A Hearty Welcome

Chase counted his new year gifts one more time as he put a robot-shaped eraser into each envelope. "Twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two."

"Do you have one for everyone in your class?" Mom asked.

"Yep!" Chase said. "I'm ready for the party tomorrow!"

When Chase got to school the next day, he saw a new girl in his classroom. She stood near Ms. Robins and looked around shyly.

"This is Eva," said Ms. Robins. "Will someone volunteer to show her around today?" Chase raised his hand since he liked showing the new kids around and helping them feel welcome.

"Thanks, Chase," Ms. Robins said. "Now let's get down to our work."

That's when Chase realized he didn't have a new year gift for Eva. No one else would have one either. Chase pictured his classmates' desks covered with gifts while Eva's desk was empty. He felt sad about that.

At a break, he was careful not to mention the party as he showed Eva around the playground. At lunchtime, he walked Eva to the lunchroom, still worried about what would happen at the party. Eva had brought a packed lunch, so Chase showed her where she was supposed to sit and introduced her to some of the kids at her table.

While eating, Chase suddenly remembered that kids often included candy hearts with the new year gifts they exchanged. This won't be a New Year's Day for Eva with no gifts. But as he sat down at his table, an idea flooded into his head. He whispered it to the kids around him. Soon everyone at the table was nodding and whispering.

When they were back in the classroom after lunch, Chase told Ms. Robins about their plan. Ms. Robins smiled. "That's very thoughtful," she said. "Let's go for it."

It was math time, so Chase invited Eva to study with him. He made sure Eva sat with her back to the room so she wouldn't notice.

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

Meanwhile, her new classmates were busying working on something.

"Here's your new year gift, Eva. It's from everyone," Chase said.
