Four Films Worth Seeing

CODA

Ruby is the only hearing member in her fisherman's family. She longs to individuate from her parents and pursue her dream to sing, but she feels weighed down by her responsibilities to them. One day, after a choir performance, Ruby's dad is quiet and reflective. He wants to feel her joy, and to understand why music is so precious to her. So he asks her to sing to him in their backyard later that evening. As Ruby expresses herself and is "heard," she feels new power in her life, and so does her family.

C'mon, C'mon

Johnny is a lonely videographer immersed in a project interviewing kids about their thoughts about the future. His work is interrupted, though, when his sister Viv asks him to watch her son, Jesse. Johnny agrees and becomes a caregiver to his nephew. From caring for Jesse, he learns to understand better his own pain and what brings meaning to one's life.

Encanto

This film is about the Madrigal family—three generations living together. Each member of the family is gifted a power by their magical house except 15-year-old Mirabel, who was never gifted any power. But then the family's power begins to weaken, and Mirabel goes on a mission to find out why. In the search to help her family, she develops her own gifts. She learns how to listen, to empathize (共情), and to work hard.

King Richard

The movie is about father Richard Williams, and his great drive to make his daughters, Serena and Venus Williams, become tennis superstars. He shows them that they can do or be anything with hard work and belief. Oracene, the Williams girls' mother, is also determined to offer her support and efforts, even when Richard gets caught up in his focus for them.

B

The COVID-19 pandemic has been a frequent topic of conversation for most of us over the past year. As we dreamt of indoor dining, vacations, and hugging our friends again, my friend Ana texted that her mother, living in Brazil, had been infected by the coronavirus. I won't go into details here, but the disruption to life in Brazil have been especially upsetting considering their social and cultural norms (规范).

Ana is Brazilian, and I'm from the US. While living in New York City, we became fast friends despite the few awkward cultural differences I learned to deal with. She was comfortable with intimacy; I preferred to keep my distance. She liked the company of many; I liked the friendship of few. It was awkward for me to lean in for a quick hug, only to be embraced then kissed on the cheeks. To this day, I'm not an excellent cheek kisser, but I try. She is one of many people over the years who have educated me, in a way, about delighting in cultural differences.

I called Ana to check on her mother and I was primarily curious about how social and cultural norms have been affected. It's difficult, said Ana, because the necessary health regulations are opposite to "what we believe and everything we know about living in a community and displaying feelings of love", but she hasn't given up hope. I asked if the shifts made during the pandemic will change cultural norms. "Absolutely not," said Ana. This is who Brazilians are in nature and change doesn't happen overnight. They spend a lot of time and energy investing in relationships, and the deeply rooted social conventions won't change quickly.

Over the years, Ana has shared many stories that emphasize the differences in our upbringing. I delight in our differences, even if kissing on the cheek makes me uncomfortable. We find our commonalities, like talking with our hands, being expressive, and valuing community. And we learn from our differences. COVID disrupted many things, but through all of this, Ana said, we must constantly be adjusting, understanding, and doing what's best for our communities and the people we love.

24. Which of the following words can best replace the underlined word in Paragraph 1?
- A. Adjustment. B. Disturbance.
C. Commitment. D. Preference.

2023 届新高三第一次联合测评英语试卷 第 4 页(共10页)

25. What can we learn about Ana from Paragraph 2?
- A. She is good at educating other people.
 - B. She enjoys the close contact with others.
 - C. She prefers to stay alone in her own comfort zone.
 - D. It took a long time for her to make friends with me.
26. Why doesn't Ana think the pandemic will change social and cultural norms?
- A. Because the Brazilians are born to be sociable.
 - B. Because the social conventions are easy to change.
 - C. Because the health regulations consist with her beliefs.
 - D. Because Brazilians rarely value investment in relationships.
27. What would be the best title for the passage?
- A. My Attitude towards Friendship
 - B. A Valuable Lesson in the Pandemic
 - C. The Influence of COVID-19 on Life
 - D. My Acceptance of Cultural Differences

C

There are many sources of debate on a long road trip, including route selection, the choice of snacks, and, probably most importantly, what to play on the radio. Finding a way for all parties to listen to their own audio without the need for headphones has been a goal of car makers for decades, and scientists may have finally managed it.

A team from the University of Le Mans in France carefully positioned microphones, speakers and filters(过滤器) to create personalised sound zones (PSZs) inside a car, and the small regions are where sound from a set of speakers can be heard clearly. Outside these, it can not be heard.

One barrier which scientists have previously been unable to overcome was the impact of moving one's seat. They were able to form a PSZ, but unable to move it to follow a person if they moved the seat forwards or backwards.

The French team created a new algorithm(算法) specifically to tackle this issue, which handles the sound waves to create "bright" and "dark" zones in the car. "Loudspeakers are placed in the headrests, and specific filters for each transducer(换能器) are calculated to reproduce a sound signal that maintains good quality in the zone under consideration and is strongly weakened in other zones," said Dr Lucas Vindrola, the author of the study. "The key to the technique working properly is having sufficient microphones placed around the car to detect how many people are in the car and where they are sitting. The price to pay is to have control microphones in the passenger section, so that the algorithm can work."

However, the technique is not yet ready to be commercially rolled out as a luxurious optional extra just yet, as it currently works only for a limited range of frequencies.

28. What was once a challenge for scientists?
- A. PSZs could hardly be formed.
 - B. The sound of moving a seat is loud.
 - C. They couldn't create movable PSZs.
 - D. The seats couldn't be moved back and forth.

29. What is the main purpose of the passage?
- A. How the impact of moving one's seat was addressed.
B. Why enough microphones are placed around the car.
C. When the algorithm can work well for all passengers.
D. Where "bright" and "dark" zones are created in the car.
30. What can we infer about the new technique?
- A. It currently works without limitation.
B. It has been put into use commercially.
C. It can function well with enough microphones.
D. It is costly to detect the position of microphones.
31. What is the main purpose of the passage?
- A. To launch a new debate.
B. To tackle an old problem.
C. To advertise an algorithm.
D. To introduce a new technology.

Several days ago Spanish fashion brand Zara sparked a fierce debate after releasing its latest campaign featuring a Chinese model with freckles (雀斑). Actually, there are some different beauty standards between the East and the West.

In East Asia, freckles might be considered a "destructive weakness" for celebrities, especially actors or singers. Although normal people don't care that much, subconsciously they might prefer a "clean" face. Generally speaking, freckles are more likely to appear if people are out in the sun frequently, and most East Asian women avoid the sun as best they can.

Having freckles, instead, is a trademark for unconventional beauty in the Western world, and some call freckles "angel kisses". For most westerners, having freckles is no longer just something you have to live with; instead, it is something to be desired. After all, not everyone is lucky enough to have freckles.

When it comes to eye shapes, it seems Western and Chinese beauty standards don't see eye-to-eye. Many Chinese think girls with big eyes are the most beautiful. If their eyes have a double-fold eyelid, that is considered perfect. However, most foreigners seem to prefer Chinese girls with slanted (斜的) and narrow eyes and eyebrows. Chinese known model Lyv Yan is often considered the country's most beautiful by foreigners, while quite a few Chinese people think her appearance doesn't fit with traditional beauty standards.

Young, girly feature or hot and mature feature? Zhao Liying from China, Aragaki Yui from Japan and Lim Yoon-A from South Korea enjoy high popularity in Asia, as they boast bright faces with warm smiles, which win them lots of male fans. The three young celebrities represent Asia's beauty standards: women with cute, girly features. Most women in Asia try their best to stay young accordingly. Unlike Chinese girls, Western girls think a more mature look shows independence and uniqueness. The superhero Wonder Woman is an ideal type for most.

As ties continue to grow between China and the West, it is unavoidable that these beauty standards

- A. There is no need to think about what you want.
 B. You don't have to change your circle of friends.
 C. Your life belongs to you, as well as your actions.
 D. By talking to them, you'll be able to organize your plans and ideas.
 E. If this is the case, it's time to start working on your self-esteem(自尊).
 F. You must do what you want without being affected by what others think.
 G. However, you must trust in yourself and seek the necessary strength to move forward.

"Go back, Mom! Go back!" shouted my six-year-old daughter, June. I quickly turned around to cast my doubtful eyes on the back seat, worried I had forgotten her younger sister. I was relieved to see the girls safe and sit in their car seats, but June's expression was one of pure anxiety. "Mom, we have to go back," she insisted. "Someone needs our help!"

As I looked back from the driver's seat, I spotted a young man in rags playing his guitar. His skinny, poor-looking dog rested next to his feet near an old, worn cardboard sign that read, "Homeless, please help."

We'd come across homeless people before and had talked about their needs and struggles. I should seize the chance to set a good example for my daughters to give a helping hand. So I searched for some cash, only to find I had nothing but credit cards. "I'm sorry, sweetheart, but I don't have any cash," I said. "I have some, Mom!" June replied. She opened her little pink purse and pulled out a five-dollar bill. "Oh, good. I'll pay you back when we get home," I responded with a sigh of relief. "No, Mom," she insisted, "I want to help him. I don't want you to pay me back. I want to give him my money."

As we drove down the crowded rows of the parking lot, I reassured her that we would get to him. When we got there, I called out, "Excuse me, sir!" He cautiously walked toward our car and answered, "Yes, ma'am?" "Here you go, sir." June stretched out her entire body to hand him her five-dollar bill through the window and explained, "I want you to have this." He smiled and hesitatingly asked, "This was your money?" "Yes! I want you to have it," she proudly answered. "Thank you," he said, touched by her thoughtfulness.

We exchanged a smile, and as we drove away, my younger daughter Scarlett began to cry. I hadn't noticed that she had emptied her purse and was holding two quarters in her tiny hands.

注意:

- 1.续写词数应为 150 左右;
