Dear Kevin,

I'm more than delighted to receive your email, in which you invited me to the school cultural festival. It will be a great pleasure for me to join such a wonderful event.

I would love to show how to make a Chinese lantern, which represents reunion in China, and can be hung in the house as a decoration. Moreover, I will prepare all the materials in advance, including the paper of different colors and the bamboo. Whoever is interested in the craft can join me in making one by themselves, and take it home.

It's my sincere hope that the cultural festival will be a great success. I'm looking forward to joining you and enjoying fantastic performances together.

Yours,
Li Hua

读后续写：

Feeling that country life might turn out okay, I wandered off, taking my violin with me. Suddenly I heard something I wasn't expecting—a beautiful, jazzy tune. I pushed through some corn only to come face-to-face with a cow. Then another hot jazz riff floated through the air. I turned around and saw a tall kid playing an old saxophone in a field of corn. His music was fantastic, and he didn't dress the way I figured a country kid would. This guy was wearing clothes that made him look cool, like a famous performer.

I couldn't resist, so I took out my violin and began to play along. The boy looked surprised, but he didn't miss a beat. We played together, and by the end, a cow was tapping her tail to the rhythm. When we finished, we introduced ourselves to each other and became friends. We also decided to write songs together. I looked at my new friend, the cheerful cow and tall corn. I could feel my thoughts about country life already changing, and I had a feeling it would change a lot more.
