听力文稿

Text 1

W: Traditionally, a couple give each other flowers or fruit.

M: But my wife prefers appliances to make home more efficient.

W: She must be quite reasonable and good at freeing up time.

Text 2

M: Let's take the fast train to Paris, even though it's more expensive than flying.

W: But I prefer to drive a car.

M: It's up to you.

Text 3

W: I have told you many times. If everyone littered like you, the earth wouldn't be livable! We should recycle everything for our own good!

M: All right, I'll do my best!

Text 4

M: How long have you felt like this?

W: Nearly two days. I started throwing up just after having the take-out my boyfriend ordered.

M: Don't worry. I'll give you a check up.

Text 5

W: It's freezing in here! Peter, you're nearest to the window. Would you mind closing it?

M: If I were you, I would put on a warm coat.

Text 6

W: Hello, Rohan. Have you started preparing for the exam?

M: No. I will start tomorrow.

W: The exam is too near, Rohan. Do you remember your marks in the last exam? Why are you still saying tomorrow?

M: Actually, math is too tough for me. I think I have to improve my basics. Otherwise, I can't study well alone.

W: Why, you haven't told me this. I would have helped you. Come to the office at 4 o'clock after class.

M: Thank you so much.

Text 7

W: Would you drop this dress off at the dry cleaner's for me?

M: Okay, but it's a little out of my way. Can I do it on Saturday?

W: No. If you take it today, I'll be able to pick it up on Saturday morning. Dry cleaning usually takes one day. I'd like to have it in time for the wedding.

M: Wedding? What wedding?

W: Don't you remember? Your niece Sylvia is going to get married on Sunday.

M: Oh, no! That's the day of the championship football game. I bought tickets a month in advance.

W: That's too bad, but surely you can see that the wedding is more important.

M: Of course. My friend will be happy to have my ticket.

Text 8

M: Hi, Susan. How are you? You don't look very happy.

W: I'm alright really. But it's my parents. They want me to go back to Thailand after I graduate.

M: Why don't you want to go back?

W: I want to pursue a career in computer engineering. I don't think I can do that in my home country.

M: Do you think you can easily land your first job here in the UK?

W: With many opportunities available, I believe it will be easier for me to build my career here.

M: What position do you actually want for your future career?

W: I want to work full time as a research scientist specializing in computer engineering.

M: Awesome! Have you consulted the career advisor at the career center office?

W: No, not yet. It never crossed my mind. Will you go with me now?

M: Of course.

Text 9

M: Hi, Meg. Are you listening to music?

W: No, I'm listening to sound books. This way, I can listen to books and exercise in the gym at the same time.

M: Cool! You can do two things at once.

W: Actually, for me, I do enjoy the sounds of pages turning. I used to borrow paper books from the City Library, although it is far from my house. But my schedule is tight, you know!

M: Sounds like you're good at multitasking.

W: Yes. I can even watch television while responding to work emails.

M: Would you email one person while talking with another or text a message while driving?

W: No! It is impolite or illegal.

M: I was just joking! But how I wish I could balance things at the same time. Will you please give me some suggestions on how to become as efficient as you?

W: No problem!

Text 10

Michael Morpurgo, born in St Albans in 1943, is the author of many well-known books for children, five of which have been made into films. After a brief and unsuccessful period in the army, he took up teaching in 1967, when he found his true interest in writing. He left teaching after ten years in order to set up a charity "Farms for City Children" with his wife. He thought what children needed most were wonderful and memorable experiences that would help them find more about the world and themselves. They have three farms in Devon, Wales and Gloucestershire, open to inner city school children who come to stay and work with the plants and animals. He is also a father and grandfather. Children have always played a large part in his life.

Morpurgo has a gift for magical storytelling. His most popular books include War Horse, which was runner-up for the Whitbread Children's Book Award in 1982 and became an enormous success onstage and on screen; My Friend Walter, which was adapted for television. The Butterfly Lion draws on the author's own unhappy experiences at boarding school. He was awarded an Order of the British Empire in 2006 for services to literature.
