One possible version:

Dear editor,

Recently, many students in our school have got into the bad habit of staying up late. Some of them go to bed late to finish their homework. However, some of them do not fall asleep until midnight, playing computer games or chatting on cellphones. As we know, teens need approximately 8 to 9 hours of sleep each night for the best physical and academic performance during school hours. To get rid of this bad habit, teens should bear in mind the bad effects of lacking sleep, make full use of every minute in class and find a balance between daily activities and sleep. Besides, turning to others for supervision is also a good way.

Yours,
