The summer before my 10th birthday my father moved our family of nine kids to a farm. We had always lived in a small city, in the house my dad had gotten from my grandparents, who had wanted fresh air, green food and lots of room for their children but failed. My father held the same will. He'd worked multiple jobs and saved for many years... and could finally afford a place in the countryside. Now a minor concern, the house had no running water or electricity. But there were 150 acres to run around in!

2. That first year my dad put in electricity, because my mom simply announced, "I won't have oil lamps with children running around!" Indoor plumbing (管道系统) had to wait another year. Different friends, who my dad knew from work, asked if he'd take their large dogs who couldn't run free in the city. So we all now played with a big orange-brown boxer and a sporty German Shorthaired Pointer, who we named Billy and Molly.

Minimalism was our goal, and also our only choice. Absolutely our clothes were hand-me-downs. Bananas and oranges were rare imported fruit we'd seen at holidays. We felt we were younger than peers (同龄人) — there was ONE birthday party a year! We'd take turns... once every 9 years a child would have his/her own party!

While money was so scarce, we had joy to hand all the time. My mother was always singing, yelling, or hugging. And she told us we owned plenty! To this day, each of us remembers those years as an abundance of things, laughter, arguing, making peace, and playing together! Every challenge was a game to defeat, and any failure was a chance to learn there.

4. Why did the author's father move their family to a farm?
- A. To carry out the wish of his parents.
B. To start a brand new life in a luxury house.
C. To improve the children's living environment.

B. Two dogs became part of the author's life.
C. The author's mother had a sharp tongue.
D. Their rural life became the envy of friends.
6. What is the author's tone in paragraph 3?
- A. Hopeful. B. Upset. C. Amazed. D. Amusing.
7. Which of the following can replace the underlined word "scarce" in the last paragraph?
- A. Practical. B. Accurate. C. Tight. D. Essential.

Think of the many different ways you enjoy fish or other seafood: steaming fish ball soup, grilled salmon, boiled shrimp and more. Now think about not having this delicious food because of no more fish and seafood. You would likely miss them a lot, and not just you. Nearly half of the world's population relies on seafood as a major source of protein.

Harvesting fish and other sea life isn't bad for the ocean, but harvesting it faster than it can recover is. This is called overfishing, and the number of overfished wild stocks has tripled in the past 50 years. Overfishing affects not only a food source but many economies. Many businesses and jobs depend on fishing for their livelihoods. When fish stocks shrink, people lose their means of supporting themselves and their families. Worldwide, fishing is a US $362 billion business. Over 4 million fishing boats sail the waters of the world. Many boats are becoming increasingly efficient, which increases overfishing.

According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the UN, one third of the world's fisheries are being pushed beyond their natural limits. Overfishing goes hand in hand with bycatch (误捕的鱼). This means unwanted sea life is captured along with the desired catch and is thrown away. Thus, billions of fish along with seabirds, sea turtles and millions of sharks are lost.

The Marine Stewardship Council (MSC) has been working with scientists, fisheries and seafood producers for over 20 years. They have developed standards promoting sustainable fishing. When fisheries meet MSC's standards, the oceans and those who make a living from them are protected. Around 15 percent of wild-capture fisheries are now MSC certified. And Fishery Improvement Projects (FIPS) in many countries are working to increase that percentage.

11. What can you do? Look for MSC's blue fish label, which appears on over 30,000 products and menus in almost 100 countries. Buying a product with this label means you're supporting a fishery that is contributing to healthier oceans.

One of my favorite studies asked one group of students to write about their "true self". Another group of students was asked to write about their "everyday self" and a 12 third group of students was asked to write about the ~~campus~~ bookstore. After the writing task, the students were then asked to rate their meaning in life.

The researchers were interested in how much detail the participants provided in their various essays, their assumption being that the more detailed description one provides about one's true self, the more likely one authentically (真实地) connects with that sense of self. Not surprisingly, for those writing about their everyday self or about the campus bookstore, the amount of detail didn't have any connection with their sense of purpose in life. However, when people wrote about their true selves, the more detailed the essay, 13.E
the more the person experienced meaning in life.

To live a meaningful life, then, make sure you are in touch with yourself. 14.A
If you don't follow your own values and dreams, you are most probably following values set by others. And there is nothing more disappointing in life than living someone else's dream. As some wisecracker has put it, it is better to be yourself, as everyone else is already taken.

Meaningfulness is about connection. While this means that a major part of the meaningfulness in one's life comes from connecting with others through intimate, caring relationships and through being able to contribute to society and those one cares about, you cannot connect with others unless you are first in touch with yourself. 14.B
Otherwise it is not you who is connecting to others but just an empty shell. Only by knowing what you are can you start to authentically connect with others.

So, set out to write about your true self and who you believe you really are as a person, what are your most important values, and what you yourself would like to pursue and have in life. Then figure out how you could make that true self more the self that is realized in your everyday life and work.

英语试题(二)(共10页)第5页

12. What is the first paragraph mainly about?
A. The process of a study.
B. The meaning in life.
C. Three groups of students.
D. Writing tasks to evaluate life.
13. What's the finding of the researchers?
A. Everyday self has connection with the campus bookstore.
B. More various essays interpret life meaning better.
C. The participants with detailed essays live meaningfully.
D. More true self description makes one experience life meaning better.
14. What can make you genuinely connect with others?
A. Following values and dreams set by others.
B. Communicating with your true self.
C. Changing "everyday self" into "true self".
D. Being able to contribute to society.
15. Which of the following can be the best title for the text?
A. Connect with Life — Dream Is Valued
B. Why Not Pursue Goals You Find Useful?
C. Be Yourself — Everyone Else Is Taken
D. Why Not Build Caring Relationships with Yourself?

My day didn't begin well when I discovered water coming out of the washing machine had destroyed my brand-new carpet. So, I shouted angrily at my husband, who played card games last night instead of repairing the washing machine.

Then, I saw my six-year-old son Jonathan touching a limb (大树枝) of my azalea (杜鹃) bush. Before I could stop it, he'd broken it. "Can I take the flowers to school today?" he asked. With a wave of my hand, I sent him off. I turned my back so that he wouldn't see the tears gathering in my eyes.

It was days like this that made me want to give up. I just wanted to drive up to the mountains, hide in a cave, and never come out. The rest of the day, I washed and dried clothes, thinking how love had disappeared from my life. Then, I looked at the clock. It was 2:30. I was late. Jonathan's class finished at 2:15 and I hurriedly drove to the school.

I was out of breath when I arrived at the teacher's door. The teacher rushed through the door and took me aside. "I want to talk to you about Jonathan," she said. I prepared myself for the worst. "Do you know Jonathan brought flowers to school today?" she asked. I nodded, thinking about my favorite azalea bush. "Let me tell you about yesterday," the teacher said. "See that little girl?" I noticed a bright-eyed girl laughing there. I nodded.

She continued, "Well, her parents are always quarreling. Yesterday she told me she didn't want to live. I watched her bury her face in her hands and say loud enough for the class to hear, 'Nobody loves me.' I did all I could to comfort her, but it only seemed to make things worse." "Did Jonathan do anything to help?" I asked. "Yes," the teacher said firmly.

Paragraph 1:

Then, the teacher told me what happened. _____

Paragraph 2:

Later that evening, I was looking at the azaleas when I heard the familiar sound of my husband's brakes (刹车). _____

One possible version:

The experience I value

There are many valuable experiences in our life. As for me, cooking for my mother on her birthday is an unforgettable incident.

I remember very well that I desired to see my mother's biggest smile that day, so I decided to surprise her with home-made scrambled eggs. Waking up really early, I tiptoed to the kitchen to start my project. It was the first time I had cooked and somehow the eggs ended up burnt. However, I was about to throw everything away when my mother came in. I smiled bitterly while she tasted, saying they weren't bad.

I guess love is indeed a magical ingredient. Actually, we ended up laughing and ate them all.

英语参考答案(二)(共2页)第1页

第二节

(说明:本题满分 25 分)

One possible version:

Then, the teacher told me what happened. This morning, my son walked straight over to that little girl, handed her some pretty pink flowers and said, "I love you." She looked at Jonathan gratefully, with tears streaming down her cheeks. Then he patted her on the shoulder and sat by her side for a long time. It was my son that helped rebuild her faith! My heart was filled with pride for what my son had done. I found Jonathan, reached for his hand and whispered, "Thank you. You've made my day."

Later that evening, I was looking at the azaleas when I heard the familiar sound of my husband's brakes. I immediately picked some pink azaleas off the bush. My husband's eyes widened in surprise as I handed him the flowers and said, "I love you." I then explained, "Today, Jonathan comforted a little girl by giving her azaleas. I've learned a lesson that we should put love into practice." My husband hugged me tightly in tears. Thanks to Jonathan, the seed of love that had been planted in my family began to bloom once again in us.
