He took a deep breath and judged the situation calmly. He knew for sure that under such a situation, a bit change of weight would break the weak balance, resulting in a terrible disaster. Most importantly, he was the only one sitting in the back, the most important one in the balance. Never in the past had he been so significant! The only solution to the crisis was that he stayed still to maintain the balance and others moved to the back and then jumped out. "I won't move. You move slowly towards me. Don't crowd. One by one!" he said calmly.

Under his guidance, the first passenger nearest him walked to him and jumped out. One after another, all passengers and the driver were rescued. He was the last one to jump out. The bus shook a little but didn't fall down. Looking at the shaking bus, all passengers gave out sighs of relief. After settling down, they began to look for Michel to express their gratitude but in vain. He had gone. Walking on the way home, he realized that everyone matters in this world and determined that he would restart his life.
