From page-turning thrillers to comic novels — here are our picks of the hottest new books for a great escape.

To Paradise by Hanya Yanagihara

A fragile, wealthy young man looks for love in the 19th century New York filled with discrimination. . . The great power of this remarkable novel is driven by Yanagihara's understanding of the aching desire to protect those we love.

Companion Piece by Ali Smith

Coming on the heels of Smith's seasonal quartet (四重奏), Companion Piece boldly captures the spirit of the times, our pandemic-infected world, describing a broader story about loneliness, sadness, isolation, and freedom. . .

Homesickness by Colin Barrett

It's been eight years since the prize-winning Young Skins, but this second short-story collection is worth the wait. Shocking and slow-burning, eight character-driven tales of misadventures are written with a casual grace, each showcasing Barrett's unique black humor.

I'm Sorry You Feel That Way by Rebecca Wait

Toxic mothers, absent fathers, angry sisters, and mad brothers — this sharp, wise comedy is full of ups and downs and severe mental health realities, describing in great accuracy and detail the process of a breakdown and how it impacts the individual family member.

A teenager has created “the entire known universe” in the popular computer game Minecraft over the course of two months. In the game's creative mode, players can build structures using blocks.

Eighteen-year-old Christopher Slayton started by building the Earth. He used a globe to measure the exact location of every continent to perfectly copy the planet. He went on to build planets, stars, galaxies and space gas.

In a video, Slayton explained that he started skydiving so he could see the planet from a different perspective, before using mathematical concepts to make sure that the universe was made to an accurate scale. In order to fit all of the planets in the universe into the simulation (模拟), every planet would need to be 700,000 times smaller.

Eventually, Slayton was working on structures that are much larger than the Earth, like the sun. He used the brightest blocks in the game to build the star, adding solar flares (光) to make it “feel alive”.

Building even larger structures — such as the Pillars of Creation, elephant trunks of interstellar gas and dust in the Eagle Nebula — took Slayton two days to simply make the colors accurate, before painting the stars and their shine in the background.

Many other impressive builds have been made in Minecraft. In 2020, a player created a life-size recreation of the Earth, bypassing the game’s built-in height limit to recreate Mount Everest and the Grand Canyon at their full scale.

The game is also a powerful learning tool for geography, history and even finance. “Minecraft exposes children to complicated financial systems,” TeacherGaming co-founder Joel Levin told The Independent. “Perhaps the most effective experiences come from having teachers get out of the way and letting the students play on their own. With a bit of coaching, this type of experience can lead to amazing conversations about digital citizenship, online identity and responsibility,” Levin said.

24. What is mainly talked about in Paragraph 3?
A. Getting the scale right. B. Measuring the continents.
C. Fitting the planets in. D. Launching skydiving.
25. Which of the following best describes Slayton’s recreating the universe?
A. Risky. B. Painstaking. C. Cooperative. D. Interactive.
26. What can be inferred from the last paragraph?
A. Conversations should happen before kids play Minecraft.
B. Questions of online identity will arise after kids play Minecraft.
C. Levin coaches his students about how to build universe models.
D. Minecraft can be an educational experience even if children play it alone.
27. Which of the following can be a suitable title for the text?
A. Minecraft, a Good Learning Tool
B. Minecraft, a Model of the Universe
C. Impressive Builds Made in Minecraft
D. A Teen Recreates the Universe in Minecraft

With new technologies such as artificial intelligence and big data, smart agriculture is expected to bring about essential changes to traditional agriculture in China.

Shi Yun, a researcher at the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences, said China would realize fully mechanized, automated, and digital agriculture through developing precision agricultural technologies.

Precision agriculture is an agricultural management system aimed at optimizing inputs to achieve the most economic and environmental benefits, using technologies including remote sensing and satellite navigation. Precision agriculture is able to bring down labor costs, save water, fertilizers (肥料) and pesticides, and reduce unnecessary decision-making errors. So far, demonstration bases for smart agriculture have been built in 13 areas including Beijing, Heilongjiang province and the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region.

Precision irrigation — for instance, drip irrigation (滴流灌溉) — can greatly decrease costs and increase the efficiency of water and fertilizer use. By increasing soil temperature, storing water, and controlling diseases, the technique has improved water and fertilizer use. Meanwhile, it has improved cotton quality and increased cotton production in Xinjiang.

“Other technologies for precision agriculture such as plant protection drones (无人机) and harvesting robots can also save resources and costs, increasing farmers’ incomes and reducing their economic losses caused by natural disasters,” Shi said. Drones can automatically generate routes by accessing high-definition farmland maps, fly and spray accurately, and provide standardized agricultural services.

However, the development of precision agriculture still faces challenges and falls behind developed countries. Some core equipment and techniques, such as parts of agricultural sensors, still rely on imports, and big shortages remain in smart agriculture technicians. Besides, more financial support is needed to comprehensively promote smart agriculture nationwide. Since artificial intelligence and robotics have been applied in China for a relatively short time, it is necessary to open up a modern path with Chinese characteristics based on local conditions.

28. What are the benefits of precision agriculture?
- A. Improving the environment and saving fertilizers.
 - B. Bringing down labor costs and avoiding mistakes.
 - C. Increasing efficiency and removing some diseases.
 - D. Generating farmland maps and providing services.
29. What does the underlined word “optimizing” in Paragraph 3 probably mean?
- A. Getting something done conveniently.
 - B. Holding a positive attitude to something.
 - C. Making something as effective as possible.
 - D. Employing a traditional way to do something.
30. How can precision agriculture be developed properly?
- A. Importing equipment from some developed countries.
 - B. Working out ways to suit local conditions in different areas.
 - C. Using artificial intelligence and robotics to develop modern cities.
 - D. Seeking financial support abroad to improve the production of crops.
31. What can we learn from the passage?
- A. Smart agriculture has replaced traditional agriculture.
 - B. Artificial intelligence depends on plant protection drones.
 - C. Precision agriculture helps boost agricultural modernization.
 - D. Demonstration bases for smart agriculture have been built throughout China.

On the eve of this week’s rail strikes, it was reported that the industry bosses are planning to weed out paper train tickets and close almost 1,000 station ticket offices in England. The transport secretary, Grant Shapps, has made no secret of his desire to see costs saved in this way. Some stations sell only a handful of tickets each week and the vast majority of transactions (交易) have moved online.

In the name of cost-cutting, station ticket offices are likely to follow the telephone booth on the corner and become memory. For those who have grown used to the benefits of organizing travel via smart phones, there will be little to feel sorry for. But for people without online access or skills — who tend to be older, poorer, and more fragile — another social barrier will have been built.

From medical appointments to payment apps for parking, more and more key services are now delivered digitally. As this revolution takes place, the interests of a significant minority are being ignored to some extent. In the case of health and social care, for example, it will often be those most in need of assistance who are least able to employ electronic devices.

The debate over ticket offices offers an opportunity to reflect more broadly on the increasing role of technology in our social landscape. The unavoidable trend towards technology is predictable, but its possible consequences need to be managed with more care. With the expanding range and increasing complexity of digital requirements, the aged are gradually withdrawing from increasing social services in their lives. Ros Altmann, the former pensions minister, recently wrote of being contacted by an elderly woman who no longer drives to her local park, because she cannot download the car parking app required.

Much more needs to be invested in helping gain easy online access. Alternative offline options must

He, handsome and attractive though small, is 73 this year, but looks much younger than he actually is. My mom got the 41 from my grandpa. And thank God so did I. You can never imagine how genuinely 42 and fascinating he could be. My grandpa absolutely leads a 43 life of old age, unlike other retired elderly people just walking with their pet birds, or 44 time at home as couch potatoes do.

He takes to cooking tasty cuisine, singing Karaoke, collecting antiques, and experiencing brand new dimensions of cultures. "Stopping to smell the roses and passing on the happiness is a 45 factor of people's happy life," he always 46 his peers.

"He is always doing everything with his 47 — so cool and enviable!" my grandpa's friends remarked. They also 48 my grandpa for his blog where he writes much, 49 his distinct opinion of life. One night his blog caught my eye. There was a 50, at the very beginning, of him hugging my grandma with fireworks blooming on Times Square last Valentine's Day. "People say reality 51 and fantasy begins when the fireworks display starts, but for me both 52 a great deal. I take great joy in everyday life 53 I can hold the hands of my love," he said beneath the photo.

I couldn't believe those were from my grandpa, I mean, from a 73-year-old person. Now I finally see the true meaning of the saying that 54 is not a time of life but a state of mind. I love my grandpa for the interesting and romantic 55 he has.

The Best Worst Thanksgiving

It was Thanksgiving morning. This year the Li family was traveling from their home in Virginia to Grandma and Grandpa Li's house in Florida. Nine-year-old Zara Li had been excited about the trip. But she found out that their beloved dog, Tucker, had to stay at a doghouse. Tucker was her best friend in the entire world. On the way to Florida, she already missed it.

In the car seat next to her, Zara's little sister, Piper, kicked her feet and sang the alphabet song. Suddenly, Piper reached over and grabbed the dog toy off Zara's lap.

"Quit it, Piper!" Zara cried. She tried to pull it back, but Piper held on tight. All of a sudden, a cloud of white stuffing flew in the air with a ripping sound. "You are such a baby!" she screamed, causing Piper to burst into tears.

"Zara," Mom sighed, "Piper didn't ruin Tucker's toy on purpose. She's only four years old. You're the big sister, so be nice."

Zara bit her lip and stared out of the window. She was always getting into trouble for not being nice enough to Piper. Her parents didn't get that Piper was wrong either. Sometimes Zara pretended that she didn't have a sister at all. This was turning into the worst Thanksgiving ever.

The way to Grandma and Grandpa's house was dark and stormy. Suddenly, Dad pulled the car over. "Uh-oh! It looks like we're not going anywhere," Mom announced. Zara saw a giant oak tree completely blocking the road.

"The wind must have knocked it down," declared Dad.

"Grandma and Grandpa's house is only two blocks away," Mom replied. "We can walk the rest of the way. A little rain never hurt anyone."

They all climbed out of the car. Wind and rain whipped Zara's hair into her face. It was hard to keep her eyes open against the wind. "You'd better hold onto my hand, Piper," Zara cautioned, but Piper didn't respond. Zara looked behind her, but Piper wasn't there. She wasn't with Mom or Dad, either. "Mom! Dad! Where's Piper?" Zara shouted in panic. "Piper! Piper!" everyone called. The wind seemed to blow their voices away. Then Zara heard a strange sound coming from the bushes nearby.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为150左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

She pushed through the branches of the bushes. _____

Finally, they arrived at Grandma and Grandpa's house with the tiny, injured _____

I think it's important to be healthy and fit. I probably don't eat as well as I should. I never have breakfast. I just drink a strong black coffee at home. And I usually phone out for lunch and have a sandwich or a hamburger at my desk. I really enjoy eating out with my friends in the evening. I do that at least three times a week.

At weekends and in the summer, I like to spend time at the beach with friends. We play soccer on the beach and there're always lots of water sports going on. I usually play tennis on Sunday evenings. I also play soccer for my sports club team on Friday evenings. It means I have a good excuse to get out of the office at the end of the week.

A Love Donation Activity

To help students in poor areas through practical actions, our school successfully staged a charitable activity to donate personal idle goods last week.

Owing to careful organization, the whole event was in good order. A wide range of items has been donated, including clothing, books, and school supplies. Additionally, on the day of donation, members of the school music club gave a well-rehearsed musical performance, which was broadcast live online.

The students' active participation impressed and touched everyone deeply. Love is abstract, while assistance is practical. We are looking forward to more upcoming events to bond with people in need!

She pushed through the branches of the bushes. It seemed to come from underneath a big, leafy branch. Zara pulled it aside, finding Piper crawled beneath it. Zara grabbed her sister and hugged her tight. She felt as though an enormous rock had rolled off her chest. "Why did you crawl under the tree?" Zara asked. "Look!" Piper exclaimed, pointing to a tiny, barking puppy. One of the puppy's back legs was pinned beneath the branch. They were able to lift it free. Zara held the puppy gently in her arms to keep it warm.

Finally, they arrived at Grandma and Grandpa's house with the tiny, injured puppy. Grandma and Grandpa were so happy to see them that they pulled everyone into an enormous group hug though they were soaking wet. The delicious scents of Thanksgiving dinner filled the air. Dad and Mom set the table for dinner. "What perfect timing," Grandma remarked as Zara and Piper settled the puppy down by the fireplace. "Your grandfather and I have been thinking about adopting a dog."

Zara smiled and sighed happily. Everyone was safe and sound. This had definitely turned out to be the best worst Thanksgiving ever.
