He may be approaching his 90th birthday, but Sir David Attenborough has no desire to slow down. Fresh from an appearance at the Paris climate change summit, he fronts a new series David Attenborough's Great Barrier Reef (大堡礁)

"There was a book by Saville-Kent called The Great Barrier Reef with fascinating hand-drawn illustrations which always fascinated me as a child. It was as if born from pure imagination. I thought no such place on earth can surely exist," he said.

Nearly sixty years after his first visit, Attenborough dives 1000 feet below the surface off the Queensland coast to explore the world's largest living organism like never before.

"It was the first place I was lucky enough to scuba (水肺) dive and I was, entering those waters, welcomed by magic. It was 1957 and I was shocked by remarkable beauty and life." The dive also gives Attenborough the chance to properly examine the effects of climate change and how the rising temperatures and acidity of the seas is causing harm to the reef.

"You can see where the sea grass is going and you know that if it continues on like that for the next decade or so, the coral (珊瑚) won't be able to tolerate it. You can show experimentally that they're incapable of living in these higher temperatures and the acidity will be such that they won't be able to form coral limestone (灰岩) anymore," he explains.

Attenborough admits that though he is incredibly enthusiastic about spreading awareness of climate change he was unwilling to be referred to as an authority on the subject. "I have a view, but it's a second-hand view. I haven't done the chemistry," he said.

The truth is, he is well respected and beloved. When he talks about something as serious as climate change we are willing to pay attention.

24. What impressed Attenborough in his childhood?

- A. The vivid imagination of TV series.
- B. Severe pollution on the Great Barrier Reef.
- C. The importance of climate change summits.
- D. Interesting pictures in The Great Barrier Reef.

25. What did Attenborough find during his second visit to the Great Barrier Reef?

- A. Mild temperatures stopped the growth of coral.
- B. The sea grass posed a potential threat to the coral.
- C. The acidity sped up the formation of coral limestone.
- D. Scientists were doing experiments under deep sea water.

26. Which of the following can best describe David Attenborough?

- A. Passionate and frank.
- B. Humorous and creative.
- C. Brilliant and sociable.
- D. Competent and generous.

27. What is the purpose of the text?

- A. To set an example for the old.
- B. To analyze climate change effects.
- C. To introduce a famous and admired person.
- D. To promote underwater sports.

C

Several years ago, the three of us started a book project to explain how learning and memory work. Two of us, Roddy Roediger and Mark McDaniel, are cognitive (认知的) scientists who have dedicated our careers to the study of learning and memory. Peter Brown is a storyteller. We have teamed up to explain how learning and memory work in this book, and we do this by telling stories of people who have found their way to mastery of complex knowledge and skills. Through these examples we illustrate the principles of learning that the research shows are highly effective.

Most books deal with topics serially—they cover one topic, move on to the next, and so on. We follow this strategy in the sense that each chapter addresses new topics, but we also apply two of the primary learning principles in the book: spaced repetition of key ideas, and the interleaving of different but related topics. If learners spread out their study of a topic, returning to it periodically over time, they remember it better. Similarly, if they interleave the study of different topics, they learn each better than if they had studied them one at a time in sequence. Thus we cover key ideas more than once, repeating principles in different contexts across the book. The reader will remember them better and use them more effectively as a result.

This is a book about what people can do for themselves right now in order to learn better and remember longer. The responsibility for learning rests with every individual. Teachers and coaches, too, can be more effective right now by helping students understand these principles and by designing them into the learning experience.

While much remains to be known about learning, a large body of research has generated principles and practical strategies that can be put to work immediately, at no cost, and to great effect.

28. What is the feature of the book?

- A. It offers examples and presents arguments.
- B. It analyzes cases and questions the authors.
- C. It combines stories with research findings.
- D. It compares online learning with real-world learning.

29. What does the underlined word "interleaving" in paragraph 2 mean?

- A. Making something more noticeable.
- B. Putting something between other things.
- C. Demonstrating the existence of something.
- D. Guessing the intended meaning of something.

30. What is the author's attitude towards the existing studies about learning.

- A. Cautious. B Approving. C. Doubtful. D. Uncertain.

31. What is the book mainly about?

- A. Effective learning strategies
- B. The three authors
- C. The work of cognitive scientists
- D. The responsibility of learners

Imagine you're out for an evening stroll (闲逛) in a foreign city, looking to find a restaurant for dinner. You will look for the busiest restaurant with the most diners because its popularity is bound to reflect on the quality of food and service. But is this true?

In tourist areas, which lack regular, local customers, the number of diners is unlikely to hold information about the quality of the meal. In this case, following the example of others could have led to a sub-optimal (次佳的) dinner choice in an overcrowded restaurant.

Spontaneously (不由自主地) copying other people's thoughts or choices or simply going with the crowd is often referred to as "Herd behaviors". It is a frequent occurrence among humans as well as many other animals, a common example being sheep.

Herding can appear to make a lot of sense. Average judgements of large groups of people often outperform individual choices. Furthermore, following the crowd appears to offer protection and comfort--after all, there's "safety in numbers"--while helping to maintain a favourable reputation. Finally, following the herd reduces the effort needed to make a personal or unique decision.

Herd behaviors, while common and easy to explain, can have many harmful effects. Blindly following the herd can have grave consequences when trying to escape from danger. As seen in examples during earthquakes, herding may result in the entire crowd rushing for the same door, even if other exits are available. This unavoidably affects evacuation (撤退) efforts and may result in avoidable injuries or even deaths.

Psychology research suggests that it's surprisingly difficult to resist the influences of the herd. In an experiment involving financial decision making, researchers found that warning messages about the potential errors of the crowd were surprisingly ineffective in helping customers make better choices. It appears there is no quick and easy fix. Instead, it is advisable to involve individuals adopting more critical approaches towards peers' opinion, and questioning others' behaviors as opposed to blindly following them.

32. What does the author want to tell us by the restaurant example?

- A. Undesirable outcomes of herding
- B. Wise dinner choices of most customers.
- C. Practical ways of avoiding herding.
- D. Poor conditions of popular dining places.

33. What does paragraph 4 mainly tell us about herding?

- A. Its application.
- B. Its disadvantages.
- C. Its definition.
- D. Its benefits.

34. What does the author suggest readers do in the last paragraph?

- A. Send warning messages.
- B. Follow peers' opinions.
- C. Stop behaving critically.
- D. Have our own judgments

35. Which is the best title for the text?

- A. Why can't you find the reasons for herding?

- B. Why shouldn't you follow the crowd blindly?
- C. When should you avoid influences of herding?
- D. How can you discover wisdom of crowds?

Living with self-doubt can be very challenging, it limits potential and breaks morale. Here are some strategies that you can use to overcome self-doubt.

- Self-compassion（自我同情）is the key.

We often doubt ourselves when we have the fear of losing, but that is a grave mistake we make. Everyone will make mistakes at some part in their lives, but we have to grow from those mistakes and transform them into a lesson.

Start your day with some positivity, look at yourself in the mirror, and make some positive affirmations（肯定）. 36

- Reflect back to your past achievements.

37 Self-reflection is one of the best tools to eliminate self-doubt. It makes you remember that you once achieved something great, and it makes you believe that you can achieve that level of success again through concentrated efforts. Learn from your mistakes and move on, and you are meant for great things!

- 38

"You are known by the company you keep", is one of the best sayings to explain this strategy. We should be surrounded by people that support and love us, not people that constantly make us doubt ourselves. Good people will help you recover from negative and stressful situations.

- Seek professional help if necessary.

39 This is the time when we should seek professional help. Talk about your feelings often; and let all the negative emotions out, which will make you feel a lot better.

- Start journaling events.

In life, there will come many events that we are thankful for, especially our achievements. 40 This journaling of events will be really helpful when you are doubting yourself.

- A. Develop new friendships.
- B. This will make your day better!
- C. They won't encourage you to be better.
- D. Always be in the company of supportive people.
- E. It is better to start keeping track or record of them.
- F. Sometimes the situation can become too much to handle.

G. Do you remember the time when you achieved something remarkable?

A Roommate Wanted

第二节（满分 25 分）

阅读下面材料，根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段，使之构成一篇完整的短文。

We were visiting our daughter when we adopted our Boston terrier, Tad. An adorable puppy, just three months old, he became the family's center of attention. Each morning, as soon as he heard my daughter Kayla moving around downstairs, he had to be taken down for playtime before she left for work. When she came home from work, we had him waiting for her at the door.

After three weeks we left for home. On the drive, we let Tad talk to Kayla on the phone each night. Once home, every time we called Kayla or she called us, we always put Tad on. He scratched the phone and listened intently and tried to look into the phone to see her.

One Saturday Kayla called while we were out. She left a message. Tad was standing beside me when I pressed the button to listen to the message. He listened to her talking and cocked his head, grinning at me. I played it again for him.

A few days later, I was taking my shower when I heard the answering machine come on and Kayla leave a message. I thought it was strange when I heard her message repeat and the machine announce, "End of messages." A few seconds later Kayla's message began yet again.

Wondering what was going on, I climbed out of the shower, wrapped a towel around myself and headed into the living room. There stood Tad, listening to the answering machine. I stopped and watched. When the message finished, he stood up with his feet against the edge of the low table, reached over with one paw (爪子) and slapped (拍打) the answering machine. The message came on again. He dropped back on the floor and listened happily. I told him "no," and distracted (使分心) him from the answering machine while I erased (抹去) the message.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 词左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

A few days later, I was in the kitchen when I heard, "You have no messages."

Knowing what Tad wanted, I called Kayla that night and asked her to leave him a message.

第一节 (满分 15 分) One possible version:

A Roommate Wanted

I'm Li Hua, an exchange student from China. I'm looking for a roommate to share the rent during my stay in the UK.

Located near the campus, the well-furnished flat is equipped with modern appliances. There are two separate bedrooms and bathrooms, including a shared kitchen and a balcony, which can guarantee your privacy and convenience.

I'm a friendly and easy-going boy who'd like to keep my room neat and tidy, so it'll be great if my roommate has a lot in common with me. If interested, you can reach me at LiHua@gmail.com.

第二节 (满分 25 分)

One possible version:

A few days later I was in the kitchen when I heard, "You have no messages." I got utterly confused and headed for the living room to figure out what was exactly going on. It was Tad who slipped the answering machine! He stood with his feet on the edge of the table, staring at the machine expectantly. However, after repeating the process for several times, Tad was running out of patience with his paws hitting the button really hard. Then it dawned on me that Tad was eager to hear Kayla talking.

Knowing what Tad wanted, I called Kayla that night and asked her to leave him a message. After hearing what had happened, Kayla agreed to give Tad a surprise. The next morning, when Tad returned home after a walk outside, he ran into the living room and pressed the button of the answering machine again. His face lit up with excitement as he clearly heard the sweet and familiar voice: "I do miss you, Tad." This was indeed a special message for him. He could listen to it whenever he wanted to hear Kayla's voice and we both longed for the next reunion with our beloved Kayla.

W: What are you doing with the computer, Richard? Chatting with friends?

M: No. Actually I'm searching and checking the classified ads to find information about apartments. You know, I live too far away from our company.

Text 2

M: I'm going to the city library. Do you need a ride?

W: Thank you! My appointment with the professor is three hours later and I want to finish the grocery shopping first.

Text 3

M: Karen, what about going to the theater after dinner tonight?

W: Sorry, Mike, but I haven't gone to the gym for days. I must go tonight. You can go with me if you want.

M: Well, I'd rather sit comfortably at the theater.

Text 4

M: What an awful month we are having!

W: It's bad, isn't it? So hot and wet. It's hard to sleep at night.

M: It's not usually this hot in the fall. Well, I think I'm going to get some more ice cream in the corner store.

Text 5

M: Should I pick you up at the club after the training?

W: Yes, please. My training begins at 2:30 pm and it will last for two hours.

M: OK then, I'll be there 15 minutes earlier.

Text 6

M: I'm off now, Mom. I'm going to meet Ben at the youth club. He has bought a new wheel for his bike, and he wants me to help him put it in. And I've got to go to the library to get my books back sometime today too.

W: Well, do that before you start work on the bike, because the library isn't open this afternoon. And don't come back too late.

M: Sorry, Mom. I'm afraid I can't come home too early. We're going to play table tennis in the park after we've done the bike. I won't see you until supper this evening. Bye!

Text 7

M: Mona, you seem on cloud nine. Want to share the happy news?

W: Well, we are usually given a load of math homework to do at the end of the week. Not this time, though.

M: No wonder. By the way, have you already finished the physics project?

W: Yes, and my teacher was so impressed with it. She gave me a book as a reward. Look! Here it is!

M: Wow, that's great. It seems that your effort has paid off. Could you lend it to me?

W: Of course! Here you are.

M: Thanks. Any plans for the weekend? How about going to the amusement park?

W: I'd love to, but I've promised my aunt to volunteer at the nursing home with her.

M: OK. I think I'll spend lots of time on this book.

Text 8

W: Steven, I had a miserable experience this morning. It was rainy, so I took a taxi to work, but the taxi driver was a green hand. Then I tried walking, but I got bad and got

W: Do you know anyone in the play?

M: Actually the woman playing Ophelia is a former classmate of mine.

W: Really? Is that why you wanted to come to the play?

M: That's only part of it! I absolutely adore this director. Every play he works on turns out great.

W: So you've seen other plays that he's directed?

M: Quite a few. By the way, after the play, there's always a big party for the cast and their friends. My classmate has invited us. Do you want to go?

W: Sure. I'd love to meet the cast! Have you ever been in a play?

M: I've never had a part in a play before, but I used to be a part of the identify in high school. I helped build the sets and find props for the plays. What about you?

W: I once helped with costumes, but I didn't enjoy it very much.

M: Oh, look. They're dimming the lights. I think we should get back to our seats for the second half of the play.

Text 10

I'll start with our six-day Isle of Man holiday. This is a fascinating island in the Irish Sea. Our holiday starts in Heysham, where your tour manager will meet you then you'll travel by ferry to the Isle of Man. Some people prefer to fly from Luton instead, and another popular option is to go by train to Liverpool and take a ferry from there. On Day 1 you'll arrive in time for a short introduction by your tour manager, followed by dinner in the hotel. On Day 2 you'll take the coach to the small town of Peel, on the way calling in at the Tynwald Exhibition. On Day 3 we have a trip to the mountain Snaefell. You will board an electric train which takes you to the fishing village of Laxey. Lunch will be in the cafe, giving you fantastic views of the island. Day 4 is free for you to explore, using the pass which we'll give you. So, you won't have to pay for travel on local transport. Or you might just want to take it easy in Douglas and perhaps do a little light shopping. The last full day, Day 5 will begin with a ride on the steam railway. After some time to explore, a coach will take you to a small island just off the coast. And on Day 6 it's back to the ferry—or the airport, if you flew to the island—and time to go home.
