

teachers for our growth.

Think of poetry as an entrance to a timeless place where we find comfort, companionship, connection, wisdom, and healing. Poetry names the disconnects as well, where we have gone blind to threats and personal sorrows that threaten to overwhelm us. With its precision of language, and its naming of experience, poetry, in a small space, usually one page, packs a wallop. Entering a poem, readers can sense painful experiences are re-framed and can be given a new understanding by a poem. That's because poetry reflects a rich mix of the sweetness and bitterness in life. It refreshes our minds and offers invented landscapes of imagery. For your own peace of mind, I encourage you to take up a friendship with poetry.

Seaweed farming, which has a long history in Asia, is spreading around the globe. Over the past 30 years, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization, world production of seaweed has boomed more than six times to over 35 million tonnes, with emerging markets in the Americas, Europe and Africa. The most recent numbers, from 2019, show that North America produces some 23,000 tonnes of wet seaweed per year.

Cascadia, which was founded in 2019, claims to be the largest cultivator in North America, with a harvest of 200 wet tonnes so far this year. Farms, small and large, are popping up fast. Many see this expansion as a good news story. The Global Seaweed Coalition (GSC)—a research and industry group—says humanity could, and should, be harvesting 15 times more seaweed by 2050. Coalition member Vincent Doumeizel is a senior adviser on oceans to a United Nations program working toward corporate sustainability. He talks about a “seaweed revolution” to feed the growing global population—a transformation as dramatic as the ancient shift to land-based agriculture. “In the ocean, we are still hunter-gatherers,” he says.

The Global Seaweed Coalition estimates that seaweed (high in protein and other nutrients) could add 10 percent to the world's food supply using just 0.03 percent of the ocean surface. One recent study concluded that substituting 10

Because emotions are infectious, showing appreciation can increase freudenfreude for the gratitude giver and the receiver. In this way, you can think of freudenfreude as something you can spread when you're experiencing personal joy.

Turn into a joy spectator.

"Too often, we think of joy passively, Franco says." We see it as something that comes to us, instead of something we can generate." But you don't need to wait for someone else's good news to exercise freudenfreude. 40 You might ask: "What was the bright spot of your day?" or "what's the best thing that happened to you this week?". Asking about other people's wins turns you into a joy spectator, giving you a chance to witness them at their best.

- A. Become a popular organizer.
- B. Show credit for your successes with others.
- C. Empathy isn't always an automatic reaction.
- D. It motivates kind acts, such as helping others.
- E. It even makes you feel as if your efforts will pay off.
- F. Cultivate joy by inviting others to share their victories.
- G. She says she's especially moved when anyone considered "other" succeeds.

Preserve Chinese Relics

第二节(满分 25 分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写一段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

I was invited to give a speech as a graduate representative at the graduating ceremony. Standing on the stage, overwhelmed by the thunderous applause, I couldn't help but reflect on my life journey. I own great thanks for success to my beloved teacher and every person who had shown me kindness.

I grew up in a financially disadvantaged family with five children. The burden of poverty, compounded by the responsibility of looking after my younger brothers and sisters, made it hard to pursue my studies further. Just when we believed things couldn't get any worse, my father suddenly fell gravely ill. His illness progressed swiftly, and we were heartbroken when he passed away. With my father's untimely death, my mother found herself struggling with the enormous task of single-handedly raising a large family. Our situation became even worse, and I couldn't bear to increase her burdens. It was then that I made the difficult decision to forego my education in order to support my family.

But little did I know that my life was about to take a turn that would change everything. One rainy day, my teacher Mr. Scott decided to brave the storm to find my humble home tucked away in the mountains. His determination to reach me despite the harsh weather painted a vivid image of his commitment and care. As the rain poured relentlessly, my teacher navigated the paths full of twists and turns, determined to understand the true reason behind my decision to drop out of school. Upon reaching my doorstep, he was greeted by a shabby house that reflected the hardships my family faced daily.

Sitting in my modest living room, Mr. Scott patiently listened to the challenges that burdened my family and me. The weight had become too much for me to bear, making the pursuit of education seem like an unattainable dream. Deeply touched by my story, Mr. Scott's eyes brimmed with empathy and understanding. He recognized the potential that lay within me and refused to let my circumstances define my future.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

At that moment, he made a decision that changed my life.

When the college entrance examination finally arrived, I faced it confidently.
