Dear Peter,

I'm writing to express my sincere apology for the accidental damage to the English classic Gone with the Wind you kindly lent me.

Yesterday evening I was absorbed in the book when I carelessly knocked down the cup, the hot water pouring over the book. I was upset that the whole book was in bad shape. Knowing how precious the book is to you, I'm terribly sorry for any inconvenience caused.

I expect to make it up to you by replacing the book with a new copy. I've purchased one online, which will be sent to you in 3 days. I hope this unfortunate incident won't affect our friendship. Please accept my heartfelt apology.

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节 (满分 25 分) (One possible version)

"Can't she be a little thief?" Ben joked, pointing at her back. His words suddenly made Jake awake to something wrong. Without delay, Jake rushed into the crowd, desperate to catch up with the girl. But she quickly disappeared from view. Frustration and anger welled up inside him when he realized he might lose his precious jacket. But Jake had to stand back with his team, waiting for the parade to start. Noticing his depression, Ben patted him on the shoulder, saying gently, "It's okay. You're with us." Jake nodded, grateful for the support from his teammate. Just as Jake was starting to accept the fact that he'd march without his jacket, he heard someone calling.

Jake turned around, only to see the little girl coming. In her hands was his jacket. With a sincere smile, the girl handed it to Jake and showed him where his left sleeve used to be broken. What Jake saw left him speechless and wide-eyed: the big hole in the sleeve was skillfully replaced by a perfectly sewn pattern that well matched the sleeve. Guilty and grateful, Jake thanked the girl repeatedly. Soon, the music began and the parade started. Marching forward, Jake waved his left arm proudly to the excited audience, deeply touched by Chinese people's kindness and consideration.
