Possible version:

Dear Jerry,

Thanks for inviting me to London in the coming winter holiday. I'd love to visit you, but I'm sorry that I really cannot make it.

As you know, I am in Senior Three this year, which means I am in the middle of preparing for the college entrance examination to be held in the coming June. Therefore, I'm determined to make the best use of every minute I have, the holiday included, to improve my academic performance. Additionally, the winter holiday lasts only for two weeks, a bit short for a trip abroad, so I'm considering rescheduling the trip for the coming summer holiday. What do you think of this plan?

Once again, I'd like to express my sincere apology. Looking forward to meeting you in London!

Yours,
Li Hua

第二节（满分 25 分）

Possible version:

I guess that was what caused my brother to come outside. I turned my face away, fearing he would tease me. Unexpectedly, he gently picked my bike up and gestured me over, "Get on it." His determined look smoothed away my doubts. As he gripped the back seat, I got on the bike, took a deep breath and started to pedal, holding tightly onto the handlebars. During the whole process, we didn't talk much. He simply offered a few necessary instructions at times. But never once did he shout at me, nor did he let me fall. His patient teaching proved efficient and I gradually got the hang of riding.

An hour later, I was showing off my riding skill to my mom. She was amazed to see me riding steadily around the yard. While sharing my learning experience with her in excitement, I noticed my brother standing at a distance smiling at me. I cast him a grateful look and he nodded and then walked back into the house. From that day on, the sad pattern between us began to change. There were occasional conversations between us, filled with less embarrassment but increasing concern. I could feel a different kind of brotherly relationship slowly developing between us. I would always treasure that day as my favourite memory, the moment when I felt the best.
