第二部分 阅读理解(共两节,满分40分)

第一节 (共15小题;每小题2分,满分30分)

阅读下列短文,从每题所给的A、B、C和D四个选项中,选出最佳选项。

A

Popular Libraries in the World

The idea of a public library—where anyone in the community is trusted to borrow books, often for long stretches of time, for free—is fairly magical. Some of the libraries in the world are pretty popular now.

The British Library, London, the UK

The British Library is comparable to the Library of Congress in terms of the size of their holdings, many of which are unique. According to its annual report, the British Library welcomes millions of visitors every year, but the figure in 2016-2017 represents a small but disappointing reduction in the overall visitor numbers.

The State Library of Victoria, Melbourne, Australia

According to its annual report, the State Library of Victoria's visitors broke the 2 million in 2016-2017 visit record for the first time in its history, making it the busiest library in Australia. It also recorded many online visits, accessed collection items and uses of digitized collection items.

The New York Public Library, New York, the USA

The New York Public Library reports that it has hosted millions of visitors and circulated large numbers of items over their locations. According to a press, the Stephen A. Schwarzman Building—the main branch of the library—yearly receives the greatest number of visitors.

The National Library of China, Beijing, China

Established as the Imperial Library of Peking in 1909, the National Library of China is now the largest library in Asia, with holdings of over 30 million items. The library's annual report puts its total visitors across multiple locations at several million every year.

21. What do we know about the British Library?

- A. It holds many rare collections.
- B. Its visitors are constantly on the rise.
- C. It has the largest collection of books in Europe.
- D. Its coverage is the smallest in the world's libraries.

22. What do the four libraries have in common?

- A. They possess two branches.
- B. They gain plentiful visitors.
- C. They are the busiest libraries in their countries.
- D. They face a decline in tourism in the 20th century.

23. In which column of a magazine can you find the text?

- A. Finance.
- B. Culture.
- C. Architecture.
- D. Technology.

As a professional life and relationship coach, Allison Cowan has over 21 years of experience in teaching and supporting others to achieve their goals. She has dedicated her career to helping her clients gain power and awareness in their lives.

As a coach, Allison inspires her clients to overcome obstacles and achieve goals. However, her practice has come with its own share of challenges. Expanding her knowledge to meet diverse client needs has involved lots of trial-and-error searching.

Initially, Allison spent a hard time building strong and trustworthy relationships with her clients. She knew trust was critical to finding and retaining clients but was frustrated at how long the trust-building process takes.

Allison soon learned that there was no single right way to coach. To meet her clients' different needs, she needed to become more efficient at supporting their diverse learning styles. To overcome her challenges as a coach and offer better service, she began looking for ways to customize her coaching solutions.

During her search, Allison realized Positive Psychology is a field with many different goals. "It covers so many areas, including whatever a client may go through," she recalled. Later, she began using self-reflection tools to help her clients develop self-acceptance and self-forgiveness. She even discovered a way to help clients without a coaching goal find their purposes. She said, "There's a lot of blame. The more they stay in blame mode, the more angry they are, and they are not able to move forward with acceptance and forgiveness. But we can find solutions in Positive Psychology."

Whether Allison was helping clients build self-confidence, understand their attachment styles, or reframe their challenges, she quickly found that she was also learning all the time. By completing the homework Allison assigned to them, her clients were also changing. They were more engaged with their coaching and making more significant progress between their sessions. That made Allison proud. She said, "They grow and move forward at a quicker pace. That's what coaching is about."

24. Why is Allison's initial trouble mentioned in the text?

- A. To show her special efforts.
- B. To stress her defeated career.
- C. To prove the difficulty in coaching.
- D. To give the reason for setting goals.

25. What did Allison do to serve her clients better?

- A. She used the same coaching ways to teach them.
- B. She coached them according to their own needs.
- C. She tried her best to change their learning styles.
- D. She helped them overcome their challenges in life.

26. What's Allison's attitude to Positive Psychology?

- A. Doubtful.
- B. Unclear.
- C. Supportive.
- D. Dismissive.

How Do Kids Develop Emotional Literacy (情感素养)?

The skills of identifying emotions and responding to other people's emotions combine to create a skill known as emotional literacy, which is a big part of a kid's social development. It will be nice if this ability comes naturally, but it isn't. 36 Here are some ways to increase their emotional literacy.

37 Parents can grab a really big piece of paper and sit down with their kids to brainstorm all the feelings they can think of. The list may include emotions kids don't recognize, but that is OK. A parent should make his/her face that goes with the feeling and explain a situation where it may come up.

Read topical books. There are many great books that specifically explore emotions. When parents are reading to their kids, ask them to figure out what the main character is feeling in certain situations. 38

Play emotional word-guessing game. This is a fun game to play with kids. One parent picks an emotion to convey to the other, using either the whole body or just a face. 39 In this way, they may be able to see their own feeling on their faces especially when they are having trouble in making sense of the faces.

Role-play social scenes and review. Come up with contexts kids may meet. 40 Alongside role-play comes reviewing. Go over situations that didn't end well, examine the emotions of the people involved and talk with kids about what could have been done differently.

【◆高三英语 第7页(共10页)◆】

- A. Make a big list of feelings.
- B. Explain reasons for kids' bad emotions in time.
- C. It is helpful to use the pictures and plots of the books.
- D. Have them act out how they will react if it is possible.
- E. Speaking out your feelings to kids matters in some situations.
- F. Ask them to make the same face as you do and look in the mirror.
- G. Kids develop emotional literacy by social experience and instruction.
