Showing Gratitude to Parents through Labor

Last week, I participated in a school-organized event called "Showing Gratitude to Parents through Labor". We students were asked to learn to appreciate and express gratitude to our parents by doing household chores. I helped to dust off the furniture, sweep the floors, and wash the dishes. It was rather tiring to do so many things.

Through this process, I began to understand the effort my parents put into maintaining our home and ensuring our well-being. I gained a newfound respect for their hard work and I really appreciate the sacrifices they make daily.

“Want to study together?” Maria asked, nodding to an empty chair. “Sure,” Julie answered. As they went through the chapters together, they found that they could help each other understand the concepts better. They quizzed each other with the practice questions at the end of each chapter, and even made up silly stories to help them remember certain dates and names. Before they knew it, library time was over. They never knew they could actually have fun studying history!

On the day of the test, Julie and Maria both felt nervous. But as they entered the classroom, they exchanged encouraging smiles. During the test, whenever Julie came across a challenging question, she could recall the discussions and explanations they had during their study sessions. A few days later, the test results were announced. Julie and Maria couldn’t contain their excitement as they saw their grades. Julie had received an A-, and Maria had earned an A. They jumped up and down, hugging each other tightly. Together, they had not only learned the material, but also learned the power of study partners and the value of helping each other succeed.
