My Greatest Happiness

I love spending time with my family because it brings us closer together. I find I develop greater love for them as the years pass, despite our differences or disagreements. I can always depend upon them in times of difficulty.

I love family dinner, which has always been the greatest happiness in my life. I love how everyone gets together and we talk over a meal. The conversation doesn't have to be relevantly important; mostly we talk about our daily life and each other. Lots of laughter is involved and everyone feels loved and included.

That's what makes us so happy. Family is constant, and so is my happiness.

I was finishing the last egg when I heard a knock at the door behind me. I led them in and couldn't help smiling when the first words out of my sister-in-law's mouth were, "Wow, your house is so tidy, and you even have time to wash eggs!" We entered the dining room and sat down at the table. As I excused myself to go back into the kitchen to get the coffee and put the delicious bread on a platter, I heard them whispering that they didn't understand how I did it with five kids. I felt such a wonderful sense of satisfaction and a big smile spread across my face.

But that smile was short-lived when my oldest son ran through the front door. With a look of shock on his face, he loudly asked, "Mom, who cleaned the house?" My mouth fell open, and I did what any mother of a smart-mouthed teenager would do. I cleverly suggested, "Sit down and have some of Grandma's delicious banana bread, son!" Then I quickly changed the subject and gave my son a warning look. He received my signal and went to greet his grandma and aunt with a big smile.
