"Language barrier is one of the obstacles that hamper(妨碍) the development of cooperation... and there is a shortage of specialists..." said Belarusian President, who just completed his official state visit to China, in a comment to support the proposal to expand the study of the Chinese language in Belarus in 2017.

2 That was also the year when Kaligaeva became the Belarus State Chinese Bridge Competition champion, but her journey of learning Chinese was no coincidence.

3 Foreign-language learning is not new in her multilingual family. Kaligaeva describes her parents who speak Russian, Spanish and German as role models with accomplished international careers in diplomacy, teaching and interpretation. Kaligaeva said that she began learning Chinese almost a decade ago and was planning to take her Chinese proficiency test, which would qualify her to become an official translator.

4 Kaligaeva shares how this journey started with a "challenge" proposed by her father who told her that "learning another European language is easy because they are similar and it's in the 'family DNA', but mastering a language from the East would make him very proud".

5 Kaligaeva and her twin sister are among the 40,000 Belarusian youth who have studied the Chinese language being taught in 35 schools across Belarus. Kaligaeva recalls that registering for Chinese classes at their local Confucius Institute was easy, but only one of the sisters managed to keep up with the challenge throughout the years. For example, Kaligaeva's beginner class started with 15 students, but the year ended with only six learners in the classroom. Although the quality of instruction and instructors has improved since she started learning Chinese many years ago due to an increased popularity of the language among young people, she warns future learners that Chinese learning takes commitment and should not be taken lightly. She says the past years of learning Chinese have been rewarding and that it is a beautiful language, which has opened her up to a culture of 5,000 years.

24. What's the function of the first paragraph?

- A. To give an example of learning language.
- ~~B. To introduce the topic of learning language.~~
- C. To call on specialist to promote development.
- D. To explain why language hampers cooperation.

Why did Kaligaeva wagon learning chinese?

- A. To learn from her parents.
 - B. To pursue her career goal.
 - C. To travel around the world.
 - ~~D. To be proud of his being multilingual.~~
- According to Kaligaeva, students in Confucius Institute should .
- ~~A. Give up halfway.~~
 - B. Learn from other students.
 - ~~C. Devote themselves to studying.~~
 - D. Admit the education quality is poor.

Which of the following best describes Kaligaeva.

- A. Responsible and creative
- B. Humorous and positive
- C. Hard-working and devoted
- D. Warm-hearted and honest

For a century, Disney has captured the hearts and imaginations of millions worldwide. From a small animation (动画) studio to a global entertainment empire, Disney has created a miracle that has lasted for generations.

Over the years, Disney has continued to push the boundaries of creativity and technology. Walt Disney, the visionary founder, revolutionized (变革) the animation industry with the creation of Mickey Mouse in 1928, the world's first synchronized (同步的) sound and color cartoon, setting a journey that would follow. In 1937, Disney released the first-ever full-length animated feature film, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, establishing Disney as a leader in animation. This breakthrough also paved the way for the future of storytelling in cinema, including The Lion King and Frozen.

However, Disney's influence extends far beyond the silver screen. In 1955, the opening of Disneyland transformed Disney from a successful animation studio to a global entertainment giant. It revolutionized the concept of family entertainment and explored immersive theme park experiences by introducing the world to a magical kingdom where dreams come true, solidifying Disney's status as a leader in the entertainment industry. Moreover, Disney's acquisition (收购) of other entertainment companies, such as Pixar and Marvel, has allowed Disney to bring characters like Woody and Buzz Lightyear, Iron Man and Captain America into its ever-expanding universe, connecting storylines and experiences across multiple media, from films to television series to video games.

Walt Disney once said, "We keep moving forward, opening new doors, and doing new things," and this spirit has been the foundation of the company's remarkable success. Disney's story demonstrates the power of dreams, creativity, and the belief that anything is possible. Nowadays, Disney has become the peak of success, a shining example of what can be accomplished when imagination knows no bounds.

The combined quantity of water on Earth has varied over the course of our planet's geological history, and it still does.

Today, Earth includes some 1,386 million cubic kilometres of water, a volume that includes water in oceans, lakes and rivers, plus ground water, vapour in the atmosphere, and the frozen water of glaciers and ice caps. On the young Earth—some four billion years ago—vast quantities of water were added to the planet by ice-containing comets (a mass of ice and dust that moves around the sun and looks like a bright star with a tail) that struck us, eventually making our world a "blue planet". But such events became increasingly rare in Earth's more recent history, and today we are in an age during which Earth is losing water.

The water loss is due to the fact that particles sometimes escape Earth's gravity to travel into space. This is particularly true of the light hydrogen atoms that form part of water molecules together with oxygen. Every time the atmosphere loses hydrogen, we lose one of the building blocks of water. Scientists estimate that Earth loses about 3kg of hydrogen per second. At this pace, Earth would run out of water in three billion years—but that assumes that we don't get any new water supplies.

New water need not come from space—it might come from the inside of the Earth. At depths below 50km, minerals contain water that is not reckoned within the water cycle. Some of it dates back to Earth's formation; the rest is part of slow geological exchange between the planet's layers. When Earth's plates sink and melt, deep minerals can release these bound water molecules so that they can subsequently rise to the surface via volcanic eruptions, adding to the planet's overall water resources.

32. How did Earth become a "blue planet" in geological time?

- A. By getting water from comets B. By making use of glaciers.
C. By releasing its inside water. D. By storing water in the ocean.

- What is the scientists' attitude towards the water loss on Earth?
 A. Worried. B. Regretful C. Uncertain. D. Unworried.
 The underlined word "reckoned" in Paragraph 4 is closest in meaning to " ".
 A. counted. B. assumed C. marked D. marked.
 What can be the best title for the text?
 A. Where Can Water Be Stored? B. Could Earth Run Out of Water?
 C. How Can New Water Be Found? D. Will There Be More Water on Earth?

During the week-long Spring Festival holiday in late January, Li Jingjing planned to visit museums in three days with her parents in Beijing. But there was a big problem. She kept refreshing the ticket sales app, finally succeeding in obtaining three that had been returned by someone who couldn't go.

Previously, she would take trips with her family or visit other relatives, a similar routine to many Chinese people during what is widely considered to be the most important holiday of the year.

When Li and her parents arrived at the China National Arts and Crafts Museum at about 10 am, they queued for about half an hour to get in. The six-floor museum, with its seven big exhibition halls, was full of visitors.

"We loved the exhibitions of paper-cutting and shadow puppets. 36," says Li, adding that it was worthwhile, despite the crowds.

According to Beijing Cultural Heritage Bureau, more than 1 million people visited museums in Beijing during the weeklong holiday. The hottest ticket is the Palace Museum, also known as the Forbidden City. Close behind was the National Museum of China, which hosted 90,000 visitors.

- A. It welcomed 230,000 visitors during the holiday.
 B. Li's original plan was to go to the National Museum of China.
 C. It was her first time visiting museums during Spring Festival.
 D. So interesting and fascinating it was that we stayed until the last minute.
 E. I felt so lucky when I got the tickets. I was so interested in all the exhibits.
 F. They found it hard to find a seat to take a break during their daylong visit.
 G. Tickets to popular museums in Beijing were all sold out before the holiday.

I remember a time when I was almost three, and my father came home from work, pulled me into his arms and began to dance me around the table. My mother laughed at us, told us dinner would get cold. But my father said, "She's just caught the rhythm of the dance! Dinner can wait!" And then he sang out "Roll out the barrel, let's have a barrel of fun," and I sang back, "Let's get those blues on the run." That night he taught me polka, waltz and fox trot while dinner waited.

We danced through the years. When I was five, my father taught me "shuffle off to Buffalo". Later we won a dance contest at a Campfire Girls Round-Up. Once my father caught on to the steps, he danced with everyone in the hall. We all laughed and clapped our hands for my father, the dancer.

One night when I was fifteen, lost in some painful adolescent mood, my father came over and invited me to dance with him. "Come on," he said, "let's have a dance." I turned away from him and cried. My father put his hand on my shoulder, and I jumped out of the chair screaming, "Don't touch me! Don't touch me! I am tired of dancing with you!" The hurt on his face did not escape me.

We did not dance together after that night. I found other partners, and my father waited up for me after dances, sitting in his favorite chair, dressed in his flannel pajamas (法兰绒睡衣). Sometimes he would be asleep when I came in, and I would wake him saying, "If you were so tired, you should have gone to bed."

"No, no," he'd say. "I was just waiting for you." My father waited up for me all through my high school and college years while I danced my way out of his life.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右。

2. 请按如下格式作答。

Just later, my mother wrote they had joined a dance club because my father loved it so much.

As my father's 60th birthday came, I knew it was time.
